HOME NEWS.

The amounts allotted were—in bills on Calcutta, Rs.2,10,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7½d.; in telegraphic transfers on Calcutta, Rs.13,00,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7½d., or a total of Rs.15,10,000. Tenders for bills at 1s. 7½d., and for telegraphic transfers at 1s. 7 9-16d. and above received in full. Up to the previous night the total amount allotted since April 1 was Rs.8,10,36,350 realising £6,558,756.

H. M.'s TROOPSHIPS.—The Jumna, Indian troopship, Captain Singleton, made a two hours' full power trial of her machinery on Wednesday at the back of the Bight after her annual refit. Captain Colomb and Mr. J. Ellis, of the Steam Reserve, and Mr. Corner, of the Steam Department of the Dockyard, were in charge of the trial. The ship was fully coaled and was down to her load-line. The average boiler pressure amounted to 59½lb., and the revolutions of the engines to 50. Under these conditions the engines developed a mean of 2,804 horses, and the ship attained a speed of 12½ knots an hour. The trial was in all respects satisfactory. The Jumna will leave Portsmouth for India on the 12th September with the 1st Battalion Royal Irish Fusiliers.

OFFICERS FOR INDIA.—The undermentioned officers embarked on board the Malabar at Portsmouth on the 3rd of September for passage to India:—Major Beale, Lieuts. Some of the cargo is being unloaded. There will be no detention in the Bombay mails, as they will go on from Suez in the Bokhara, now passing through the Canal, and the China and Australian mail will be sent forward by the Mirzapore, now waiting at Suez for the Bokhara's arrival from Brindisi. The Canal is not blocked." A later telegram through the same agency from Suez says:—"The Ganges, which grounded in the Canal yesterday, floated at 1 p.m., to-day, and is now on her way here en route for Calcutta."

DRAFTS FOR INDIA.—On Sunday a draft of the East Surrey Regiment, consisting of 260 privates, with the usual proportion of officers, sergeants, and corporals, were served out with the white helmet required for service in India. The draft proceeded on Monday morning by train to Portsmouth dockyard, and embarked on board the Malabar, for conveyance to India, and to join the 1st battalion at Dinapore. The 1st Royal Irish Fusiliers, under Colonel Stevenson, C.B., will embark at Portsmouth dockyard on the 11th instant on board the Jumna, for conveyance to India. The battalion will be stationed at Ranul Pindi for about two years. Previously to marching from the north camp, en route to the port of embarkation, the battalion, numbering about 800 officers, sergeants, drummers, and rank and file, will be inspected by Major-General his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, or his successor in command of the 3rd Infantry Brigade. A draft of the Norfolk Regiment embarked at Portsmouth on Monday for Bombay in the Malabar. The draft consisted of Major Allcard, Captains Griffin and Thuckburgh, and Lieutenant Smith, three sergeants, one drummer, three corporals, and 180 privates.

LONDON PRODUCE MARKETS.

FRIDAY EVENING.

Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson say that since the last mail the produce markets have experienced no decided improvement, but with reduced supplies prices generally fare steady. The low qualities of sugar meet with some inquiry, the business including Jaggery on the spot at previous quotations. Stocks of the latter and other cane grown are greatly reduced. To-day importers accepted easier rates for refining West India. Beet for shipment in the last three months offers at the decline previously quoted. French loaves have sold at a fall of 6d. per cwt. Public sales of China tea, although held daily, have not been so extensive as during the two previous weeks. No further change is reported in Foo Chow congous. Black leaf teas, however, have a firmer tendency. In coffee the chief feature has been a good demand for Brazil on floating terms at firmer rates. Later advices confirm the reported short crops, and Java will show a deficiency this year. The stock in Europe continues very large, but the returns for this month are not yet made up. Plantation Ceylon and Central American have realised steady rates. Other descriptions are about the same as last quoted. At the cinnamon sales on Monday the result was even more unfavourable than anticipated, fine qualities especially being very depressed, and less than half the supply in the catalogues found buyers. In other spice the only change has been a revival of speculative demand for black pepper at rising quotations. Zanzibar cloves unsettled, with prices again weaker. The market for cocoa is firmer. In rice few sales are reported, higher rates being required. East India Cinchona bark about steady.

TEA.—(From Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson's Fortnightly Circular).—Since the 16th inst. 26,000 packages have been offered at auction, 18,000 being new season's, 1,300 from Ceylon, 350 from New York, and 2,100 in second hands. The improved inquiry reported in our last circular has developed during the fortnight into an active business, and the sales have passed with spirit at very full prices for all but the lowest qualities of leaf and broken. The latest imports from nearly all districts are satisfactory, some of the Assam teas being unusually good for early invoices, and many of the Darjeeling and Terai teas of exceptionally fine quality; Cachar and Sylhet growths, though superior in leaf and liquor to first arrivals, are still below their usual standard. The few imports from Kangra Valley and Chittagong are of fair average quality. The chief competition has been for the finest of Pekoe, broken Pekoe, and Pekoe Souchong, and fancy prices have been obtained for the choicest parcels. In the grades below, however—such as are classed "fine" only—buyers operate more cautiously, and some irregularity is noticeable, as shown by the different prices realised for parcels divided in Calcutta. There is not yet any movement in tea "for price"—viz., broken, 8d. to 9d.; Souchongs, 10d.; Pekoe Souchongs, 11d. to 1s.; Pekoes, 1s. to 1s. 2d., doubtless owing to the good value obtainable in China and Java teas at these quotations. Our latest telegraphic information respecting the crop points to the import being about the same as last season. Ceylon teas continue to show good quality, and the demand is maintained. Average prices realised for invoices during the fortnight range from 11d. to 1s. 9½d. The first public sale in Colombo was held on July 28, about 150 packages being offered, but the bids were below sellers' limits, and the teas were mostly withdrawn. Results of the past season's working have been published, showing in some cases, at different elevations, a yield of more than 700lb. per acre, one garden giving as much as 800lb. over forty-five acres. Messrs. J. C. Sillar and Co., in their circular, state that so far as they can learn, the total shipments from China up to the 26th inst. amounted to 99,000,000lb.—viz., 56,000,000lb. from the Yangtze (55,000,000lb. of which was Congou and 1,000,000lb. green tea), 34,000,000lb. from Foochow, and 9,000,000lb. from Canton; last year at that date they were about 92,000,000lb.—viz., 52,000,000lb. from the Yangtze, 32,000,000lb. from the Min, and 8,000,000lb. from Canton.

COFFEE.—At the public sales plantation Ceylon went at steady rates, 170 casks, 113 barrels and bags mostly sold, small, 60s. to 66s.; greyish to middling, 72s. 6d. to 80s. 6d. up to 92s. for bold. Of 238 casks 1,163 bags East India, the small part that was sold was steady, medium to bold Coorg, 86s. 6d. to 102s., small in proportion. Guatemala is in good demand, and 2,279 bags mostly sold at former prices. Foxy to fine ordinary greenish, 44s. to 50s. 6d.; bolder, 56s. to 58s.; hard gray, 62s. 6d. to 65s.; colory, 68s. to 68s. 6d. 60 bags of Central American sold at 43s. to 60s.; 74 bags Mexican, 50s. to 51s.; 256 bags washed Rio bought in at 64s. Privately a large business in Rio at better quotations, and during the week a cargo sold at 39s. 9d. per cwt.

SELECTED ARTICLES.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE following speech was made at the landholders' meeting, at Bhagalpur, by Mr. Morrison, in seconding the fourth resolution:—

"Maharaj, Rajas and Gentlemen, I have great pleasure in seconding the resolution just moved by the Kumar-sahib. This is the English translation of it:—

"That it is unwise to unsettle the customary and other laws that govern the relation between the landlord and tenant, and interfere with freedom of contract, without grave necessity, and unjust to deprive the landed class of valuable and ancient rights, without giving adequate compensation."

There is no disputing the truisms contained in that resolution. We have to see how far they may be applicable to existing facts and conditions. Is it true, then, that the old customs and laws of the land are on the eve of being unsettled and invaded, that contracts are to be overriden, and lastly, that compensation is being withheld, even without the apology of pressing necessity.

The speakers before me have dwelt largely, though not exhaustively, on the invasion of several ancient rights and customs connected with the landed interest in Bengal and Behar. I shall confine myself to the consideration of a single custom. I refer to the usage of written contracts between landlord and tenant, the good old institution, in fact, of pottas and cabuliats. (Hear, hear.) We are happy in being able to trace its existence, in the remotest antiquity, from the ancient literature of the country. We have evidence of its existence, in the forms of sunnud, tassulleh, pottas, and hookumnamas, on leaf, bark, and vellum. We are daily bringing evidence of it to the earth's surface, and God's light, in the shape of stone tablets and copper-plates, from caves and excavations on the sites of temples, palaces, and private homesteads. The institution must have been in full force, gentlemen, during the days of the permanent settlement, as you will see, if you care to consult Sections 52, 55, and 57 of Reg. 8 of 1793. (Cheers.) It was then thought to be of the greatest utility and necessity to the country—to the zemindars and ryot alike! The covenants contained in the pottas and cabuliats of those days were deemed sacred, and legally binding on the contracting parties. This view of the case never diminished one jot throughout the long administration of John Company Bahadur—"Right Honorable" in every sense of the word!—and, in 1859, under the direct government of our gracious Sovereign, the Queen, men's opinions as to the necessity of written contract, in all revenue matters, instead of weakening, had become all the stronger, and culminated, so to say, in the passing of the well-known Act of that year, compelling the execution of pottas and cabuliats. Legislation in that respect did not stop even there; for, in 1865, special registry offices and officers came into existence, to attest the bona-fides of the documents just referred to, and to "publish them to the world."

But now, gentlemen, how does the Bill propose to deal with pottas and cabuliats, with your ancient custom of free contract? That Bill would sweep away altogether whatever freedom, or choice, you or your ryot ever had in the matter of the preservation, declaration, or giving up of any right, connected with jotes, in the provinces of Bengal and Behar.

What do you think of these proceedings, gentlemen—can you help feeling that you are being wronged, and that the treatment is wholly unmerited? (Applause.) And in proposing a Tenancy Law, like this new one, has Mr. Ilbert, or, for the matter of that, have any other members of the Viceregal Council been able to show the public the existence of that "grave necessity," without which measures so grave, so crushing, so extraordinary, are wholly unjustifiable! Are we not, both ryot and landlord, at this very moment in peace in this our lovely province of Behar? Had not our ryots all that they had ever asked or wished for in the law of 1859? Do they complain, or ask for more? One is really puzzled to find out what has brought upon us a thing like Mr. Ilbert's Bill No. 2, unless it be that we are being "paid off" for our admiration of the Chief Justice's manly minute on the Rent Bill while it was yet in petto! (Cheers.)

In his speech concerning the Bill, if you remember, gentlemen, Mr. Ilbert made some remark about the wisdom of confining legislation to existing wants and necessities, and letting the unknown future alone, to be dealt with by those who might be then at the head of affairs—on the principle, I suppose, of "sufficient for the day is the evil thereof!" His Excellency the Viceroy, however, was understood, in his turn, to go a little way beyond Mr. Ilbert's theory—he, that is to say, His Excellency, would not wait for, but would "anticipate the future." Now see how His Excellency and the supporters of the Bill do anticipate and provide for the yet unborn ryots of Bengal and Behar. (Hear, hear.)

The zemindar, of course, must come up first for orders—he is to be divested of his "proprietary right" in the soil. The same is, then, to be vested in—shared between the full-blown rose of an "occupancy ryot," and that modest little budding (now being introduced to the world by Mr. Ilbert as) the "ordinary ryot." At first, the former, and a little while after, the latter also, shall have the right to sell, bind, mortgage, and transfer their jotes to strangers, in any way they may please: the zemindar will have no right to interfere, excepting in the matter of paying off their debts! He will have become in fact, a sort of paymaster general for the whole lot of ryots; and his reward will be the right of pre-emption, which under the Bill means, and can only mean, that he will get, as his money's worth, something, that is to say, an "occupancy jote," the power of enjoying which, however, will be somebody else's—never his own. (Laughter.)

to answer for them—"nothing at all!" Let me tell them this then—that the Behari is far better off, as he is at present, than he will be with the right of transfer, &c., that await him. The fact is, he is the most reckless and improvident fellow on the face of the globe; and a shrad, or a wedding, followed up by a season or two of bad harvest, will more than suffice to take the new proprietorship out of his possession. He will get into the hands of the banniah and village modie, and they will find the ways and means, very shortly, of divesting him of his "occupancy jote;" and—and he will have then become promoted to the high dignity of a day labourer, a coolie! (Applause and laughter.)

So much for the Bill's provision for the "unborn millions" of Behar; behold the wisdom of altering the ancient laws and customs of the land! (Renewed laughter.) Permit me, gentlemen, to say a word here about the Permanent Settlement, and the folly that would destroy it. (Hear, hear.) The great Cornwallis was neither a fool, nor a traitor to his country. He had his eye as much on the future as on the pressing necessities of his own time, when he granted the glorious dumnam! Why should the Englishmen of to-day think less favourably of their great countryman than do the natives of India? He established system and order in the newly subjugated provinces, and filled the treasury with revenue, increased a hundred fold, and made permanent too, against all the vicissitudes of time and the seasons. He brought peace and prosperity to those provinces; and made them the envy of the neighbouring, unconquered States—rendering their subjection easy in the future. He succeeded most nobly in converting secret discontent into honest, open loyalty, enemies into friends; and finally, he succeeded by that great master-stroke, the Permanent Settlement, in binding you, the princes and landowners of Behar and Bengal, for ever to the Throne of England and the English nation with the bond of reciprocal interest and heaven-blessed gratitude! (Loud applause.) Gentlemen, the wisdom of Lord Cornwallis's large-hearted policy, was well tested in this our very district in 1857. Look around you and see how many there are in this assembly—Beharees, one and all!—sons of brave and loyal fathers, whom a generous and just Government had honoured with princely honours, for their devotion to it in its day of trial. (Applause.)

Before I conclude, I should like to dwell a little on the subject of "compensation"—that compensation, which according to every principle of justice and equity, should have followed the privation of so many rights to you. But you will look in vain in the Tenancy Bill for any compensation at all—to the Zemindar I mean. On him devolves the pleasant duty of paying everybody, as I have already told you, without receiving anything in return. He will be required to compensate the future "ordinary ryot" for his "high cultivation" and "latent fertility," and what not besides—you must take a trip to England to learn "high farming," to find out what these fine terms mean? And he must compensate the bunniah and the modie classes (by a turn at the scientific game of "pre-emption") for helping those occupancy ryots to ruin themselves; and he will then have obtained what? Not an occupancy ryot's right; he will, in fact, have obtained nothing, as I have already tried to explain to you.

Seriously, gentlemen, under Mr. Ilbert's Bill, you will cease to become proprietor, or master, in any sense or shape—you are to be treated worse than your own ryot; for he, good man, is protected against any adverse occupancy claim on the side of his kurtalidars, whereas you might purchase an occupancy jote ten times over, and be just where you were, before you made the purchase! (Shame!) The fable of the samp-chachoondar, snake and muskrat—a disgusting fable, though of your own fair land!—is about to be realised in your own persons; "swallow and die, or let go, and get blind!" There is no escape from the situation; or rather, there will be none, when once you have been fairly put into it; therefore avoid it, by protest, and timely representation, humble, and yet firm.

Another parting word, gentlemen. Mr. Ilbert with the laudable desire—but at the cost of other people—of creating a footing, even for the "ordinary ryot," in the Zemindaries of Bengal and Behar, has tried to incorporate some of his own ideas and experiences of English farming into the provisions of his notorious Bill, No. 2. Now the conditions of things in a cold, northern land, like England or Ireland, is entirely different from the condition of things in your own bright "land of the sun." There, owing to the poverty of the soil, a farmer would, in the case of a lease of even three years, have to invest, if not the whole, at least a good portion of his little fortune—in deep ploughing, chemicals, and extensive artificial and natural manures, before he could hope to get a remunerative return from the land, in the shape of a single crop in the season. But here, what will a ryot of three years do—let it be a reasonable supposition—for the land? He will never go beyond a four or six inch depth of ploughing done, as you are aware, with the rudest and cheapest contrivance, in the form of a plough. And as for manuring, he will trust to "God's fertilising sun" and "fattening rain," to do that; and—he will get three bumper crops out of that field, too, in a single year or season! But, then, things cannot always continue so. At the end of the third year, the land will have become exhausted, and will need a year's rest. It will be, then, that that fine gentleman, Mr. Ilbert's "ordinary," will present his little Bill for "compensation!" Let us see for what? For it may be "latent fertility;" but most certainly for "natural exhaustion!" (Hear! and laughter.) Gentlemen, I must make room now for other and better speakers." (Applause.)

At the conclusion of his address, the speaker was requested by many Rajahs and native gentlemen present, to allow his speech to be published in the newspapers. He, thereupon, handed over his notes to a gentleman connected with the local press. The present is nearly a verbatim report, taken on the spot.

IMPORTANT MEETING OF NATIVE CHRISTIANS AT KRISHNAGHAR.

THE native Christians of Krishnagar held a meeting on Saturday, the 28th July, to consider whether it would be advisable for their communi y to take any part in the agitation which is now going on in the country. Bubu Behari Lal Chandra (special sub-registrar) was voted to the chair. The chairman, after describing what was taking place in the country, said that the question which demanded their decision was, whether they should be on the side of loyalty and peace, or on the side of disloyalty and revolution. It was true, he said, the agitators disclaimed all motives of disloyalty and revolution, and declared that their only object was to secure advance, progress, and reform for their country. But when it remembered that great reforms (for example Local Self-Government) had been before obtained without the aid of any such violent agitation, it might be reasonably doubted if the agitators did not really want something more. In his own mind, the chairman said, this doubt was greatly strengthened by a perusal of the eloquent speech of the great orator who had been justly called the prime mover, the life and soul of the agitation. Reading the concluding portion of that speech, the chairman addressed the meeting as follows:—"Where are our beneficent workers, the propagators of the new faith? New faith do they call it? In the days of yore India gave birth to many a strange faith. But it was reserved for the year of grace, 1883, to see her delivered of this monster, lusus nature, of a new faith called by the sweet name of agitation! And yet after all this new faith is not altogether a new thing. Contemporary history tells us that a faith of a similar kind has been working now for some years past in unhappy Ireland, with the result of producing in it secret murder and dynamite societies. 'Where are our beneficent workers, the propagators of the new faith? Let them gather round the banner of the Indian Association; let them disseminate the principles of the Association replete with national life, and then this darkness will disappear, and the morning star of liberty, of peace, and righteousness (!) will appear resplendent in the Indian firmament. Take hold gentlemen, of those words 'darkness' and 'liberty.' They are the keys wherewith to unlock the secret motives of the agitation. The agitators think that darkness and chaos now reign over the land. The British Government, they think, is nothing but 'darkness.' That darkness must be dispelled, and dispelled by a dissemination of the principles of the Indian Association and then, we are told, shall arise the 'morning star of liberty.' Morning star, do they call it? Had they any regard for accuracy, they should have called it the bloody meteor that for a time shed its lurid glare upon unhappy France and burnt up everything. This, gentlemen, which these agitators aim at, is not progress and reform, but liberty. Now, in a country ruled by a foreign Government what does that word liberty mean? Why, it means, if it means anything, the subversion of the foreign Government, and the substitution of native rule. If I remember rightly, the Right Hon. John Bright, in a recent speech, called the Irish agitators 'a rebel party,' I wonder what epithet the venerable old man would apply to men who want to dispel from India the 'darkness' of British rule.

"What is the duty, what the mission of Native Christians at such a time? What is the duty, what the mission of those who have enrolled themselves under the banner of the Prince of Peace? Why, gentlemen, their duty is to be on the side of peace, and their mission is to preach peace, peace and good will to all. I have heard it said that the Native Christians are a small and insignificant community, and that they can do nothing. Gentlemen, we are not so very small a community as people generally suppose. There are at this moment more than a million and a-half of Native Christians in India. In this district alone there are some six or seven thousand of them. A million and a-half, surely, is not a very insignificant or despicable number. But what if we are but a small community? Our task is not one that requires the aid of might and number. We aim not at dispelling the darkness of a foreign Government. Our aim is a most humble one. It is simply to preach peace. And surely that is a task that the poorest and the weakest may undertake without being guilty of presumption. Let us then be up and doing. Let each Native convert go forth and tell his neighbours at least, if he can do no more, to avoid pestilential agitation and to be peaceful and loyal; and if they are really anxious to see the morning star of liberty, to wait for the coming of Him who is the root and offspring of David, the bright and morning star."

The following resolutions were then unanimously adopted.

I. That this meeting firmly believes that (as experience and history amply prove) the religion of Christ is the only effectual remedy for all evils, whether moral or social; that the cross is the only moral lever for lifting up fallen humanity, the only regenerator of individuals and of nations; that Truth alone can make of a people free, and that Christ is the Truth, the Way, and the Life. That this meeting therefore earnestly hopes that all Native Christians will make unceasing efforts to proclaim to their countrymen the regenerating truths of the Gospel of Christ.

II. That while claiming for every community the fullest and freest right to represent to the Rulers any grievance it may have, by means of petitions, memorials and deputations, this meeting disapproves of organisations having for their sole object political agitation. Looking at the state of Ireland and the effect that has already been produced in this country, this meeting believes that such organisation tend to fester a spirit of disloyalty, and are dangerous to the peace and well being of society. This meeting therefore is of opinion that, on principle, Native Christians should keep themselves entirely separate from all such organisation.

III. That this meeting is convinced that (as has been the case in Ireland and other countries) political agitations, unless they meet with immediate and unqualified success, engender a spirit of deep and lawless revenge, and ultimately grow into Fenianism, Socialism and Nihilism, all of which are most dangerous to the well being of society, and is therefore of opinion, that Native Christians should not join in the political agitations that have been recently setup in this country.

IV. That the British Government is not only the best Government ever enjoyed by this country, but is one of the best Governments existing on the face of the whole earth; that the Rulers, though foreign, are just and impartial, and are fully alive to the interests of the natives, which it has been their aim always to promote, and that therefore political agitations like those recently set up are uncalled for and needless.

V. That in the opinion of this meeting the agitations that have been recently set up are most unwise and inopportune, as tending to hamper the hands of Government, which has lately introduced certain measures of reform in the sole interest of the natives.

VI. That this meeting deeply regrets to find that the Rev. Dr. K. M. Banerjee, whom all Native Christians regard as their venerable chief and patriarch, should have thought it proper to lend the weight of his great name to the agitation recently set up, thereby compromising the eminently loyal and peaceful character of Native Christians, of whom he is the universally recognised chief and representative.

VII. That the resolutions now adopted be printed both in English and in Bengali, and be forwarded to the brethren in other districts, with a request that, if they concur in the views expressed in the resolutions, they may signify their concurrence in such manner as may be most convenient in each case.

Mr. Thomas Biswas proposed a vote of thanks to the chair. The idea of convening such a peace meeting, he said, had originated with the chairman, and he thought that the best thanks, not only of that meeting, but also of the whole community, were due to him. The vote was carried with acclamation.

P. NATHANIEL SIRCAR.

THE DIABOLICAL OUTRAGE ON MRS. HUME.

(Report of the Trial from the Englishman.)

Hurroo Mehter, alias Greedhar, mehter, pleaded not guilty to four charges of an indictment charging him with (1) having on the 11th June 1883, voluntarily caused grievous hurt to Mrs. Edith Alice Hume; (2) with having attempted to commit rape on Mrs. Hume; (3) with having assaulted Mrs. Hume with intent to outrage her modesty, and (4) with having on the same date entered the premises of Mr. J. Hume, intending to commit a crime for which he would be liable to punishment of transportation for life.

Mr. Phillips, Standing Counsel, prosecuted.

Prisoner was undefended, and was tried by a common jury.

Mr. Phillips opened the case as follows:—The prisoner at the bar was charged with a most outrageous and audacious crime, and as to which there could be, he thought, very little doubt that he was guilty. He was formerly a mehter in the service of Mr. Hume, the Government prosecutor, and had been discharged some eighteen months or so before last June. He had come to the house about a week before the 11th June, to ask for a chit, which was refused him, and on the 11th he came again and attempted the offence with which he was now charged. Mrs. Hume went to take her bath at about 9-15 a.m., according to her usual practice, and closed the bathroom door leading into her dressing room and fastened it with a catch, so that no one could enter from the dressing room. The defendant's entrance appeared to have been from the jhilmil door from the terrace, and this door was also fastened. When Mrs. Hume had undressed and was ready to bathe, she heard a movement outside this mehter's door, and called out "mut aa"—do not come in; imagining it was the house mehter. The person outside passed his hand through the jhilmils, uplifted the bolt and stepped in. Mrs. Hume, astonished, asked him what on earth he meant by coming in there. He did not say a word; but stepped over a raised portion of the bathroom behind which Mrs. Hume was standing, seized her round the waist, threw her down, and attempted, undoubtedly attempted, to commit the offence of rape. He used very considerable violence towards her, loosening some of her teeth with the blows which he gave her, either with his fist or head, it was not clear which, and altogether showed a thorough determination to persevere in his attempt. Mrs. Hume screamed and struggled with him, and endeavoured to keep him off, but she was unable to do so, and, while she was screaming, Mr. Hume came and burst open the door leading into the dressing-room, and found Mrs. Hume lying on the floor of the bath-room with the defendant on the top of her. He dragged the man off, and made him over to the police. These were the facts, and they were very simple. The case was one which was almost without precedent. For a man of his class to attempt such an outrageous thing as that was almost unprecedented. What led him to do it they were unable to discover, but what the jury had to consider was whether the prisoner did, in fact, attempt to commit the offence of rape. That was the main charge. This offence came under section 511. It was unnecessary to explain to them in detail what rape consisted of, because this was not a case of rape, but only an attempt. They were to consider what the intention of the prisoner was in what he did, and in regard to that, Mr. Phillips did not think that the jury could have the slightest doubt. He could not suggest himself any possible ground of doubt. The jury had only to inform themselves what the man wanted in that bathroom, in the bathroom of an English lady, and committing what he had told them he did. What was his object, what could have been his object, but to go there and commit rape? It was not necessary that he should enforce this fact on them, because it would be an insult to their common sense to come to any other conclusion than that.

The extraordinary low caste of the man, of course, only strengthened that idea, because he was a man of such a low caste that, unless he had made up his mind to do something very desperate, he would never have gone into a bathroom in the way he did. He was a man who must have fully determined upon what he was about to do, otherwise a man of that caste would shrink, more than a man of any other caste, from such an idea. He thought the jury could not have the slightest doubt, on the facts, that this was the man's intention, and that he was attempting to carry out that intention when he was seized. The next charge against the man was that he caused grievous hurt. That charge rested upon the same facts, and also upon this other fact, which was another serious aggravation of his offence, that Mrs. Hume was, at the time, considerably advanced in pregnancy, and that an assault of this nature on a lady in that condition was likely to lead to more serious consequences than otherwise. The whole thing was so horribly atrocious that it was impossible to suggest anything which could possibly aggravate the main offence. However, if aggravation was possible, it was supplied by the circumstance that the lady was in this state. The jury would also have to find this fact—that the attack, made on her when she was in this state, was dangerous. The jury would have to be satisfied that the attack made on her was such as to endanger her life. Then he was also charged with having assaulted and used criminal force towards her, intending to outrage her modesty. The last count was that under section 450, the commission of house trespass in order to the commission of an offence punishable with transportation for life. The circumstances with which they would have to be satisfied to form this offence were the same as those under the second count. If the jury found him guilty on the second count, they must find him guilty on the fourth and last one.

Evidence was then gone into.

Alice Edith Hume, examined, stated: I am the wife of Mr. James Torrens Hume, the Government prosecutor. I know the prisoner, who was in my service some eight months ago. He was a mehter. I do not know why he left, as I have nothing to do with the under-servants. I remember the 11th June, and saw the prisoner on that morning. About a quarter to nine I had gone to my bathroom as usual. There is a door between the bathroom and dressing rooms. It was fastened with a hook. The mehter comes in from a jhilmil door, which I had fastened with a bolt from the inside. I was undressed at the time. I heard the venetians move and thought it was the mehter. I called out to him not to come in. A hand was then put in and the bolt drawn, and the prisoner came in. I asked him whether he did not hear me tell him not to come in. He said nothing and took two steps towards me, and tried to catch hold of me with his arms. He tried to get me round the waist. He tried to throw me down, and we struggled. Eventually he threw me down. I was screaming for help at the time. . . . My screams brought my husband. . . . I had two of my teeth loosened and my back very much bruised. I was enccinte at the time. My husband dragged the man away, and I heard him asking for forgiveness. I told my husband what had happened. Dr. Birch came to see me about half an hour after this. I told him what had happened. I was laid up for four days. I have a maid servant named Rachel Blaquiére. She was in the dressing room when my husband broke open the door.

James Torrens Hume, examined, said: I am Public Prosecutor. The lady who has just left the box is my wife. I know the prisoner. I do not identify him as being a former servant. I remember the 11th June, and remember this occurrence. My little girl came to me and gave me some information, and I heard some shrieks. In consequence of this, I rushed to the bath-room and found the door locked from the inside, with a hook and catch. I forced the door and rushed into the room. All this took not half a minute. I found Mrs. Hume lying on her back. . . . Prisoner was on the top of her, and seemed to be trying to get hold of her hands. I caught him by the hair and body, and dragged him on to the terrace. He struggled to get away, and then called out "Ma ke jai." I called for the police, and my Khan-samah came up. We both took the prisoner downstairs, and gave him in charge of a constable. I returned and found Mrs. Hume in the bath-room. She told me she was about to pour water over herself when she heard someone trying to open the bath-room door. She told him "mut ao," that then a hand was put through the door; the door opened and prisoner stepped in; that she asked him why he dared come in. He made no answer, threw her down on her back . . . and at that moment I came in. Rachel Blaquiére followed me into the bath-room when I pulled the prisoner off Mrs. Hume. She was trembling and very much terrified. Dr. Birch came and examined her.

Edward A. Birch, examined, stated: I know Mrs. Hume, and remember seeing her on June 11. I examined her, and found her lying on the bed sobbing, looking very pale, silent, and, for a moment, unable to answer my questions or my greeting. She made a statement to me in reply to several questions which I put to her. I made notes of some of them verbatim. [Witness here detailed what Mrs. Hume told him, which was merely a repetition of what she deposed to above]. I found two teeth in the lower jaw loose; the lip opposite the teeth was cut and bleeding. There was an abrasion on the right side of the back, about four inches from the spine and four inches from the right shoulder blade. There was a transverse bruise like a weal, such as would be produced by a blow from a stick, about 2½ to 4 inches long, just below the right shoulder. It would be produced by a fall on a ledge. There was also a large and severe bruise on the right buttock. This is the memorandum made at the time (put in). This is a correct description of what I saw. Mrs. Hume was enccinte about four months. She had received a very severe shock, and I apprehended abortion, and treated her accordingly. An abortion at that stage might be dangerous to life. She has had a threatened abortion lately. In my judgment, the treatment she received from prisoner may have caused it. She suffered about four days or more.

Rachel Blaquiére stated: I am in Mrs. Hume's service, and have been so more than two years. I know the prisoner as a sweeper in Mr. Hume's employ. He left more than a year ago. I remember the 11th June. I saw the prisoner one day. He came to ask Mrs. Hume for a letter. This was a week before. He was refused the letter. On the 11th Mrs. Hume went to her bath as usual. I was in her dressing-room playing with her little girl. I heard Mrs. Hume calling out to him not to come inside. This was five minutes after she entered. I then heard her screaming out. I then went to the door, but could not open it, and I then sent the little child for her father, who came and burst open the door. Then he went inside and I followed, and found Mrs. Hume lying on the floor undressed, on her back. I saw the prisoner there too. He was on the top of her, and Mr. Hume dragged him away. The prisoner had no business either in the house or bathroom.

Shaik Matoo, a khansamah in the employ of Mr. Hume, was next examined. He identified the prisoner as having been in Mr. Hume's service, and saw him that morning on the terrace to which the bath room opened. His master and prisoner were struggling together and witness went on the terrace, secured him, brought him downstairs and handed him over to the police, aided by his master.

His Lordship then briefly summed up, and pointed out to the jury that he felt bound to say that there was not sufficient evidence to support the charge of grievous hurt.

The Jury, after a short consultation, acquitted the prisoner of the first charge (grievous hurt), and found him guilty of all the other charges.

Prisoner, when asked what he had to say, stated "—What I have to say is this, I have never committed this crime; you are my father and mother. I am a mehter, how can I commit this crime? It is not possible for a mehter like me to commit such a crime. I am not guilty. You are not going to punish an innocent man for nothing. I have got no witnesses. I have said what I have to say. His lordship is there to do justice, and he will do justice. You are my father and mother, I went there for a certificate."

His lordship, in passing sentence, said he entirely concurred in the verdict of the jury, and, considering the violence which had been used towards the lady, he would inflict a heavy sentence on the prisoner. The sentence was that he be transported for eight years on the second charge only, no sentence being inflicted on the other charges.

PROMOTION IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

WHEN Sir Charles Wood signed the warrant for organising the Indian Staff Corps in 1861, probably with a light heart, it could little have been anticipated what a Frankenstein was then created. The Staff Corps was the first experiment for giving promotion in the various ranks up to lieutenant-colonel after a fixed number of years service, and, on the ex uno disce omnes principle, the conclusion to be drawn is fatal. Schemes for accelerating retirement have been before successive Secretaries of State for the last fifteen years, and various improvements in rates of pension have been made. But as fast as one limb is lopped off the monster grows another in its place. In despite of bonuses and curtailments of periods of service, the absurd spectacle still meets us in the "Army List" of cadres of officers, on which the lieutenant-colonels and majors very far outnumber the captains and lieutenants.

This disproportion is the most marked in the Madras Staff Corps, which numbers no fewer than 220 lieutenant-colonels to 160 subalterns. Such a state of things is deplorable. We hear of field officers of twenty-eight years' service doing duty as wing officers of regiments—that is, performing the work of subalterns while drawing the pay of a lieutenant-colonel or major. It must puzzle the brains of Sir Frederick Roberts and his adjutant-general to know what to do with this extraordinary army of field officers. Unfortunately, while their numbers are growing, the list at the other end is recruited with great difficulty. Already in India the Government are issuing appeals to fine young men in Line regiments to join the Staff Corps, somewhat similar to those we are accustomed to see decorating the sentry boxes at the Horse Guards. But they decline to come in. And no wonder, considering that, with the exception of permanent service in India (a very doubtful advantage), the Staff Corps does not offer one single inducement. There are literally no chances of promotion. However much a man may distinguish himself he can never attain higher substantive rank, except by the hard-and-fast rule of serving so many years, months, and days in the topics. Not one day out of India after entrance to the Staff Corps is allowed to count towards making up the tale of twelve years required for promotion to captain or twenty years for major. Now, considering that the average period of service of the junior captains of the Imperial Army is nine years, and that no deduction is made for leave in reckoning towards pensions, it is not surprising that the ears of young officers are deaf to the voice of the charmer. Again, the rates of pay, originally fixed for the Staff Corps, have been practically diminished, owing to the great fall in exchange. It is true that this affects all officers in India, but then their luckier brethren under the War Office have a chance of home, and can always remain in England, if they prefer it, by exchanging. The Staff Corps offers one long vista of dragging out life in Indian cantonments with a worn-out constitution which there is no chance of recruiting, except at the cost of cutting down the pittance which is the only source for the support and education of a family. There can be no question that the rules as to not counting leave towards service for pension are most short-sighted. They directly create the swollen lists of nominally effective field officers who help to exhaust the Indian Exchequer. Instead of offering every inducement to men of twenty or twenty-five years' service (who have done their best work) to retire, the present regulations keep them hanging on in the hope of "putting in" thirty-eight years, so as to claim colonels' allowances. This is done either by keeping lieutenant-colonels at stations where there is nothing whatever for them to do, or by allowing grey-haired men to do the work of subalterns.

To sum up, the whole system imperatively demands entire reconstruction. No amount of tinkering and patching will meet the urgent necessities for renovation. Notwithstanding all the amendments in the regulations during the last few years, the present state of the Staff Corps is worse than ever. It is impossible to properly officer the native regiments in India out of the attenuated lists of captains and lieutenants which are shown in the Army List. In the opinion of many competent authorities, the number of European officers with each corps was fixed dangerously low. Be this as it may, opinion is unanimous as to keeping up the present establishment at its full strength. And this cannot be done unless the service is made much more attractive for entrants. The present regulations were made when the Imperial Army had a totally different organisation from the present one. Now that officers are promoted in it solely by seniority and merit, and are certain of a pension of two hundred a year after twenty years (a great proportion of which may be passed in pleasant climates), it wants something very different to the present terms to induce them to go into exile in the East, with its real disadvantages and very doubtful attractions.—Broad Arrow.

SECRETARY—Mr. George Draper.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The Directors of the Eastern Telegraph Company, Limited, are prepared to receive subscriptions for the unallotted Balance of the above Stock, which is issued under the authority of Special Resolutions, whereby the Company's Mortgage Debenture Stock is constituted a first charge on the undertaking and revenue of the Company, and the total amount issuable is never to exceed one-third of the paid-up share capital of the Company for the time being.

The share capital consists of £3,800,000 Ordinary and £700,000 Preference Shares, both classes being at a premium.

The present issue is made for redemption of Terminable Debentures falling due in October next, and for payment for the Trieste-Corfu Telegraph Cable, and other important expenditures on capital account.

The Company was formed in 1872 by amalgamation of four then existing separate companies. It now owns about 18,250 miles of submarine telegraph cable, consisting of duplicate, and in some cases triplicate, lines, between England, Spain, Portugal, Gibraltar, Malta, Egypt, Aden, and Bombay, with a series of cables between Italy and Greece and the islands of the Levant, and extending to Cyprus, Syria, and Constantinople, from whence a cable of the Black Sea Telegraph Company, worked by the Company, runs to Odessa.

The Company's cables are, with few exceptions, laid in depths of water which permit repairs being made with facility and economy by its own ships.

The net revenue of the Company, after paying all working and other expenses, income tax, &c., for the three years ending March 31, 1883, was as follows:—

|      |     |     |     |     |          |
|------|-----|-----|-----|-----|----------|
| 1881 | ... | ... | ... | ... | £367,523 |
| 1882 | ... | ... | ... | ... | £368,852 |
| 1883 | ... | ... | ... | ... | £400,777 |

and the dividends and bonus paid on the ordinary shares have been in the corresponding periods at the rate of 5½ per cent., 5½ per cent., and 6 per cent.

The reserve funds at March 31, 1883, of the Company (accumulated from revenue) stood at £369,828, of which £328,574 was at that date invested in securities.

Subscriptions in any of the existing debentures of the Company will be accepted, at par, in lieu of cash, and credit given for the interest thereon up to the first half-yearly date for payment of interest on the Debenture Stock.

Prospectuses and forms of application may be obtained at the offices, 66, Old Broad-street, London.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"The author in a few pages gives all that is required to enable a tyro to become an intelligent and successful player. To render Ecarté less dependent on drawing the king of trumps, the author suggests a modification in the scoring."—United Service Gazette."Whoever 'Aquarius' may be, it is very certain that in writing of Ecarté he is quite at home. This compact and shrewd little handbook is worth studying, even by those who know the fascinating game."—Society."This is a good guide to the game of Ecarté, the rules being clearly explained, the examples numerous and instructive, and the concluding advice sound."—Naval and Military Gazette."Here is a small shilling book of a size really suitable for the pocket, and containing a most masterly exposition of all that we need to enable us to play this game. Ecarté having been somewhat neglected, the present work should go well."—St. Stephen's Review."A little handbook useful to all those who wish to know the game. It is neatly got up, and the descriptions in it and the rules given are extremely clear; while diagrams show particular hands."—Scotsman."This is an excellent guide to a capital game, which, as 'Aquarius' observes, has some similarity to whist, though it is a game for two players. Excellent, too, is the advice at the end of the little book."—Broad Arrow.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A quaint and undoubtedly clever book from the pen of a native of India. The volume consists of a series of short sketches of scenes and people in Gujarat, which may be regarded as typical of classes of the community, their ways of life and modes of thought. Mr. Malabari's English style is remarkably good, and seldom exhibits any want of ease.
His book is of special interest as throwing some light on the real feeling of the natives with regard to their British rulers."—Daily Telegraph."The book is clever throughout."—Academy.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE, THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CHLORODYNE is admitted by the Profession to be the most wonderful and valuable remedy ever discovered.

CHLORODYNE is the best remedy known for Coughs, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma.

CHLORODYNE effectually checks and arrests those too often fatal diseases — Diphtheria, Fever, Croup, Ague.

CHLORODYNE acts like a charm in Diarrhoea, and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentery.

CHLORODYNE effectually cuts short all attacks of Epilepsy, Hysteria, Palpitation, and Spasms.

CHLORODYNE is the only palliative in Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Cancer, Toothache, Meningitis, &c.

Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he had received a despatch from her Majesty's Consul at Manila, to the effect that cholera has been raging fearfully, and that the ONLY remedy of any service was CHLORODYNE. — See Lancet, 1st Dec. 1864.

CAUTION.—BEWARE OF PIRACY AND IMITATIONS.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was, undoubtedly, the Inventor of CHLORODYNE; that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, was deliberately untrue, which, he regretted to say, had been sworn to. — See Times, 13th July, 1864.

Sold in bottles at 1s. 1/4d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each. None is genuine without the words "Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming Medical Testimony accompanies each bottle.

Sole Manufacturer, J. T. DAVENPORT, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London.

THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EX- PRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire; comprising as it does 250 millions of our fellow-subjects.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Aug. 21; Madras and Allahabad, Aug. 20; Calcutta, Aug. 19.

THE publication at Simla of the opinions of the local authorities on the Ilbert Bill is the all-engrossing topic of the week for Anglo-Indians at home. The very unfortunate incident of the "enormous discrepancy" between the figures as telegraphed from Simla by Reuter, and the truth as subsequently elicited by the publication of the Times telegram and the consequent inquiries of Reuter's head office, have universally created a most unpleasant impression.

WE deal with the subject in our leading columns. The unpleasant points are these—(1) that the telegram, though ostensibly an ordinary Reuter, is proved by the date of its publication to have emanated from an official source; (2) that the amazing error, in giving 26, instead of 205, opinions against the Bill, was not discovered until after the publication of the Times telegram, although so startlingly contrary to all expectation—that it was singularly to the advantage of Lord Ripon's Government (as were all the similar "errors in transmission" of the former March telegram)—that it has been published prominently in every corner of England, whilst the contradiction hardly appears, except in Conservative papers—and, above all, that the explanation now wired from Simla that 26 was an error in transmission for 205 appears to be an absolutely impossible one, for if 205 was the number actually telegraphed by the Simla agent or his official inspirer, and not 26, where in the world did he get the "total of 140," which is clearly the total of 11 and 26?

IN our leader, we have stated frankly our fear that, whilst the astoundingly false figures have been prominently published—and commented on in the tone of the two extracts we quote from a Plymouth and Bristol paper—in every corner of the land, there is "no security" that the correction will ever overtake the falsehood. It is a significant fact that, since those words were written, the Daily News and the Daily Chronicle—though actually addressed directly on the subject, in a signed letter by the Secretary to Reuter's Company—actually publish that letter in each case in a more or less obscure corner, without one word of editorial comment.

APPROPOS of this shady affair, in the same article, we refer to a paragraph communicated to the Leeds Mercury, apparently emanating from some one connected with the "Committee" organised by Mr. Foggo and Mr. Hodgson Pratt. We say "apparently"—and we shall be exceedingly glad to publish a disclaimer from the two gentlemen we have named. This is the paragraph. Our London readers will be able to judge of its veracious character for themselves:—

"The British India Committee, says a correspondent, have just concluded a series of meetings which have been held in various parts of London in support of the Ilbert Bill and of Lord Ripon's general policy in India. These meetings, without exception, have been largely attended, and although every freedom was given to those who have been endeavouring to stir up public feeling against Mr. Ilbert's Bill to put forward their views in this public way, they have not ventured to do so. It has been shown that amongst the general body of electors in the metropolis there is a decided feeling of sympathy with Lord Ripon's policy."

THE analysis of the local opinions is so admirably done by the Times Calcutta correspondent that very little further comment is needed.

THE opinions depend, with almost mathematical precision, on two considerations, the larger or smaller amount of Indian experience, and the closer or more distant connection with districts affected by this Bill, as possessing a large non-official European population. Thus, the Assam officials are against it to a man. So are the European officials of Bengal. Indeed, the only European in Bengal who approves of the Bill is stated, by a delightful Irish bull, to be an American missionary. This American-European gentleman must be one of the two famous friends of Mr. Gladstone's son in Calcutta; and even he takes care to add that his congregation do not agree with him.

To any one who is acquainted with the characters of the officials whose opinions are referred to in the Times analysis, it would be impossible to offer better proof of the baseless character of Mr. Bright's slanders, than is afforded by the mere list. Mr. Bright may think it a curious thing (he probably would think it so, in his total blindness to the real merits of the question), but it is an undoubted fact, that of all those officials who are well known in public repute, to be firm friends of the Natives, there is not a single one actually in favour of the Bill—whilst the vast majority, like the Chief Commissioner of Assam and the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, are dead against it. And we are glad to believe that the Natives themselves—barring the professional agitators, who need not be taken into account—are beginning to appreciate the significance of this fact. We begin to see light after the dark cloud of this embittered controversy, when the Pioneer is able to announce that "an influential section of Native society in Calcutta" is likely to petition for the withdrawal of the Bill.

OUR native friends would do well to ponder carefully Sir Frederick Robert's opinion in favour of the Bill—which we believe to be really typical of Lord Ripon's policy. Sir Frederick would give the jurisdiction to all native covenanted civilians, but—would take good care that no more Natives enter the Covenanted Service! That is the real upshot of Lord Ripon's policy, only stated with a soldier's bluntness.

THE Times of India well says:—

"Sir Madhava Row delivered a very interesting address on educational and other topics at Madras a few days ago. Amongst other subjects touched upon by the speaker were the position and status of educated natives. Sir Madhava is unquestionably the most successful and able member of this class of the community, and it is not surprising to find him speaking well of his educated fellow-countrymen. He claims that the progress of education has decidedly raised the moral tone of the community; that it has created an intelligent native public opinion, and that it has 'brought into existence a number of reformers in the various departments of native life who are striving to improve the existing state of things in various respects.' He believes that the native intellect is capable of indefinite development under favourable circumstances, and he is also of opinion that Indians need not be oppressed with any suspicion that nature has constituted them as a race appreciably inferior to any on the face of the earth. On the question of the loyalty of educated natives the ex-Dewan is very emphatic. He urges that educated natives realise and appreciate the blessings of British domination far better than the great mass of the people, whose knowledge is limited to their own personal experience, and who can hardly recall the frightful misgovernment of the past. Criticism, he urges, is too frequently taken for disloyalty, and he cites the homely illustration of a wife complaining of the conduct of her husband with the object of obtaining better treatment, and without wishing to secure a divorce, to better define the position of the educated natives. He admits that some of the native newspapers are 'too often unmeasured in their public criticism,' but in explanation of this he points out that many native prints are conducted by young and half-educated men, who take to journalism on their failure to obtain any other kind of employment. This explanation is no doubt true to a certain extent, but it must be admitted that there are cases in which objectionable writing cannot be attributed either to want of experience or defective education. One of the best written and ablest conducted papers in Bengal is most virulent in its abuse of everything British, and some of the things which have appeared in its columns are a disgrace to the native Press. Sir Madhava urges that educated native agency should be more extensively employed by Government, and speaking from personal experience he avers that an educated native, when he has some practical training is a far more useful and trustworthy official than a native of the old school. Other topics were touched upon in the speech, including the desirability of social intercourse between Europeans and natives, a point upon which Sir Madhava feels strongly, as he believes that the existence of such intercourse is of great political value. The address may be taken as an eloquent and spirited defence of the educated native, against whom some hard things have been said lately. Even those who are inclined to differ from the speaker in some of his remarks, will readily acknowledge the skill and moderation with which he puts the case, and all his old friends in Bombay will be glad to find that his speech has lost none of its old charm."

THE following extraordinary paragraph appears in the Tribune, a paper published in Lahore:—

"As we were going to press, we heard that letters were being circulated in the city through the Post Office. These letters purport to rouse people to false patriotism, and are replete with the most mischievous insinuations. The whole thing must be due to some evil disposed person—an unquestionable enemy of the native community. We draw to the matter the attention of the authorities, and hope the mischief-maker will be brought to condign punishment."

The Friend of India says, apparently referring to the same affair:—

"We learn that the postal officials in the Punjab have made the discovery that seditious letters are being circulated in that province. A seizure, it is said, was made a few days ago, of a number of letters addressed to certain persons in Umritsur; and containing pieces of black cloth, which were to be worn, the writer said, in mourning for Surendro Nath Banerjee. Reference was also made in each letter to the approaching visit of the Maharaja Dhuleep Singh to India. According to the above authority, 'this was spoken of in terms which were distinctly seditious.'"

We desire to refer, in terms of the warmest praise, to an article (which we reprint elsewhere) on the Ilbert Bill, that appears in the Friend of India and Statesman for August 11. With the exception of a brief paragraph at the end in favour of a compromise—for which, we feel, the time has now gone by—there is not a word in the article with which we do not entirely sympathise; and we are quite sure that, if all the supporters of the unfortunate measure could only write of it in the same fair and considerate spirit, the opposition to it would soon be deprived of half its bitterness—whilst the prospect of a speedy return to the old friendly relations between the English and Indian races would be immensely improved.

In a letter to the Secretary of the Tirhut Indigo Planters' Association, the Hon. Mr. Gibbon thus describes the position of the planters in respect of the questions dealt with in the Tenancy Bill:—

"As planters, our interests must be identical, and it would not do to allow others to think that, in advocating the interests of our own district, we wilfully neglect theirs. Our interest in the Bill, as planters, are manifold. As traders we are interested in seeing that the ryots' interests in the land are so clearly defined, that we may know the exact amount of risk we run in advancing them funds; that no facilities be afforded the ryots of defrauding us by evading existing contracts; that no obstructions are put in the way of fair bargain, and that others, who may be hostile to our industry, have not the means afforded them of placing obstacles in its way. As agriculturists we claim a right to acquire occupancy rights in land on the same terms, and with the same legal incidents attached, as will be permitted to other ryots under the Bill. As ryots it is, therefore, our interest to see that the legal incidents attached to an occupancy holding are clearly defined, and not hemmed in with unnecessary restrictions. As zemindars, tenure-holders, and land-holders we are interested in seeing that landlords' rights are defined in such a way that all business connected with property may be transacted without friction, that facilities be afforded of collecting, quickly and cheaply, rents that are fairly due, and that others be not induced by the loose wording of the law to encroach upon the landlords' rights."

No body of men, whether with reference to the practical experience they possess, or the varied nature of their interest in the result, are more competent to pronounce authoritatively and impartially on the true bearings of the problem to be solved.

The Lahore Tribune says:—

"We spoke in our last of letters of a questionable character being circulated in the city. We have seen a few of these letters ourselves. They have a piece of black ribbon on the top attached with a pin. The contents are as follows:—'India for the Indians only. Wear this and let it be the sign of brotherhood and friendship. Remember our noble Surendronath Banerjee of Calcutta. Be true to our race as Indians. Strike now or never. Maharajah Dhuleep Singh ke jai.' The letters seem to be written in feigned hands. Some of them are addressed to particular individuals with the addition 'Native Gentleman of the City, Lahore,' and some 'to Native Gentlemen of the City, Lahore,' only. The covers bore the postmark 'Travelling P. O., Umritsur.'"

The Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending August 21:—Colonel J. P. Turton, Commandant of the 4th Goorkhas; Lieutenant Charles Amphlett Gardner, Adjutant of the 5th Madras N.I.; Mr. Patriok John Kay, C.E., Dinapore; the Rev. Father Majet, S.J., Trichinopoly.

We extract from the Englishman the following account of the Calcutta Freight market for the week ending August 18:—

"Since last week the condition of our market has considerably improved for the better. The arrivals of unfixed tonnage, both steam and sail, have been unusually large, but contrary to custom, the steamers were held off the market, enabling those already fixed to force up their rates 2s. 6d. to 5s. per ton; sailing ship rates have also become firmer, but not to the same extent as steamers. Four ships have been fixed during the week, one for the Continent, one for Liverpool, one for Dundee, and one for New York, slightly higher prices being paid for all September loading. One steamer has secured a time charter on the Coast, and one has been chartered to the Continent. Our unfixed tonnage stands at 47,296 tons.

MESSERS. BALMER, LAWRIE, AND Co.'s Indian Tea and Weather Report has the following on Tea prospects for the week ending August 18:—

"The weather throughout the tea districts has been generally rainy, and though good for growth of leaf, it has been too cold and damp for manufacture; it is probable, therefore, that, though the outturn is good in quality, the quantity of tea may not be so good as could be desired. Assam.—Dibrugarh.—A good deal of rain has fallen over their district lately, and the weather has been fine for growth; but the days being chiefly dull and rainy, with little sun, are not good for manufacture, so that many planters are now impeded in that respect. Most gardens are gaining a little in outturn on last year.—Jaipur.—During the last half of July about 16 ins. of rain fell in this part, which gives a total rainfall higher than last year to the same date, but lower than the average. Most of the rain fell at night, and as it was generally hot and bright during the day, reports have reached us of the gardens doing well in tea.—Sibsagar.—More satisfactory reports have reached us from this district; plenty of rain has fallen, with a moderate amount of sunshine during the day; yet there are complaints on some gardens of the leaf still coming out but slowly, owing no doubt to the bushes having been affected by continued unfavourable weather for so long before. The gardens are much behind as a rule; the nights are rather colder than is desirable at this time of year. On some estates tea bushes are suffering from a peculiar kind of blight.—Jorehaut.—The weather in this district has been most favourable; and flushes are coming out strong; nearly all gardens seem still much behind last year in outturn.—Lakhimpur.—This month opened with favourable weather; heavy warm rain, mostly at night, with intermitting showers, and sun during the day brought forward some thick and heavy flushes.—Mungledie.—A good amount of rain has fallen here lately, and the days have been generally cloudy and dull; the rains seem to have set in for the first time this year, and gardens are making a large quantity of tea. Cachar.—The weather over this district has varied considerably in different parts, but has been favourable on the whole for growth, though too cold for manufacture; blight is still bad in parts. Darjeeling.—Much rain has fallen over this district since our last report, which has been favourable for tea at lower elevations, but on the higher gardens more sun is wanted. The leaf comes out pretty well, but there is a tendency to hardness on some estates, which makes it difficult to get good quality; a few gardens have picked up, but we hear that some are still much behind their estimates. From Kurseong we hear that the weather lately has been very bad, the sun not having been seen for nearly a week. At Hopetown during the past fortnight the weather has been fairly favourable for tea, but sunshine is wanted; on the 10th, nearly 6½ in. of rain fell. From the Dooars the latest reports say the weather had cleared up, but that since the 8th instant it had been one continuous downpour, nearly 20 inches having been registered on one garden. Kumaon.—The rainfall for July has been registered at 13 1-13th inches; more sunshine is wanted as the weather continues dull and cloudy. The highest yield in the district is 400lbs. per acre, and the average 260lbs. Kangra Valley.—For the week ending 4th instant there had been a great deal of rain over this district; but the previous week had been finer. Chittagong.—Continuous wet weather has interfered with the proper withering of the leaf, and there is no appearance of a change for the better; the rainfall to date exceeds in some parts of the district the average of the full year. The temperature has been rather warmer since the beginning of this month, but sunshine is wanted to help manufacture."

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

The following season reports for the week ending the 7th August are published in the Gazette of India:—

"The break in the rains noticed last week still continues; and except in Bengal, Assam, and Burma, the rainfall of the week has been generally light and insufficient. In the Madras Presidency the unirrigated crops of three districts are suffering from want of rain, but elsewhere agricultural prospects are on the whole good. In the Southern Mahratta districts of the Bombay Presidency continued dry weather is beginning to wither the crops, and rain is urgently wanted; along the western coast, where the fall has hitherto been heavy, the recent light rains have been favourable, but elsewhere in the Presidency more rain is wanted. In Sind the lowness of the river is causing anxiety. Little or no rain has fallen during the week in Hyderabad, Central India and Rajputana, and serious injury to crops is anticipated, particularly in Rajputana, if the break continues. In Burmah, Bengal, and Assam there has been sufficient, and in some places heavy rain, and prospects are favourable. Dry weather prevails over the Central Provinces; the crops are still doing well, but more rain is wanted for the rice. In the eastern districts of the North-western Provinces and Oudh there has been good rain, but elsewhere the fall has been scanty; irrigation is being resorted to in the Meerut and Agra districts; and except in Saharanpur, crop prospects are still good. Light showers have fallen in several districts of the Punjab, but rain is urgently wanted throughout that province. Harvesting is in progress in Madras, and later kharif sowings and transplanting of rice in Bombay. Young locusts are appearing in most of the Deccan districts and vigorous measures are being taken to destroy them. In Hyderabad, Central India, Rajputana, the Central Provinces, and the North Western Provinces and Oudh, kharif sowings have been completed, and the crops are being weeded. In the Punjab, sowing is still going on. In Burma ploughing is nearly finished; sowing and transplanting are in progress, and the young crops promise well. Early rice is being reaped in Assam and Bengal, and transplanting of late rice is going on. In parts of Bengal transplanting operations are retarded by excessive rain, and heavy floods have damaged the crops in parts of Cuttack. Cattle-disease of a mild type continues to be generally prevalent. Cholera appears to be abating in Northern India, but is still severe in parts of Bombay and the Central Provinces. Prices are rising in tracts where the rainfall has been unfavourable."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Times correspondent, dated Calcutta, September 9:—

"The official opinions upon Mr. Ilbert's Bill, together with a number of memorials and petitions submitted to the Government upon the subject, were published yesterday as a supplement to the Gazette, and form a bulky volume of nearly 500 closely-printed pages. It is impossible to give anything approaching to a full analysis of the contents of this volume in a telegraphic despatch. Putting aside, for the moment, the petitions of private individuals or bodies, most of which have already appeared in the newspapers, I shall confine myself to dealing with the opinions of officials and of persons officially consulted.

"The general tenour of these bears out the common expectation concerning them. An overwhelming majority oppose the Bill. The few friends of the measure are for the most part men of little Indian experience. It may be remarked, too, that the Bill meets with most favour, or, to speak more accurately, with least hostility, in the Bombay province—in which an even more sweeping measure would have but little effect; while in Bengal, Assam, and the planting districts of Madras and Coorg, the only provinces practically affected, it has no considerable European supporter.

"The opinions may be classed under three heads, the first class, including the great majority, both in number and weight, consisting of those who advocate a withdrawal of the Bill. The second is a very small class, consisting of those who advise the Government to pass the Bill. The third class is larger than the second, but much smaller than the first; it is formed of those who advocate some form of compromise. This third class might be subdivided into many sub-classes, according to the nature of the compromise proposed. It would be quite wrong to reckon all members of the third class as supporters of the principle of the Bill. On the contrary, very many of them either express no opinion on the question of this principle, or distinctly state their disapproval of it. For the most part, they ground their support of some form of compromise on the notion that the Government cannot afford to admit its mistake, and that the Europeans will be unduly elated or the natives offended by a withdrawal. The real sentiment of most of them can only be estimated by a perusal of the minutes which they have recorded. I can now do no more than give a rough classification, and vaguely indicate the line of argument of the most prominent among them.

"To begin with the heads of administrations. Eleven of these have been consulted, of whom five recommend a withdrawal of the Bill—namely, the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, the Chief Commissioner of Assam, the Chief Commissioner of Coorg, the Chief Commissioner of Ajmere-Mhairwar, and the Resident at Hyderabad. To these may be added Sir J. Morris, late Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, who, before vacating his office, put on record his opinion that the Bill should be abandoned. The remaining six show differences of opinion which will hardly strengthen the case of the Government.

"The Governor of Madras thinks that a withdrawal would be a grave political error, but he would confine the operation of the Bill to native covenanted civilians. The other members of the Madras Government cannot well be called advocates of the measure. Sir Frederick Roberts considers the native civilians are logically entitled to the same powers as their European colleagues, but adds that there should not, for the present, be any further admissions of natives to the Covenanted Civil Service. Mr. Sullivan, the junior civilian member of Council, entirely agrees with General Roberts. Mr. Carmichael, the senior member, records no minute, but there is no ground for supposing that he has changed his views since last year, when he strongly objected to the proposed change.

"The Governor of Bombay would confine the powers granted by the Bill to natives appointed to the office of district magistrate or sessions judge, and would give to every European accused person the right to claim a jury. He is careful to add that his remarks must be taken as applicable only to the Bombay Presidency.

"The Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, is, perhaps, the most thorough-going supporter of the Bill. He would give the jurisdiction in question to all native first-class magistrates, but only after they had gone through a long period of probation, and passed certain strict tests, from which their European colleagues would be exempted.

"The Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Provinces would cut down the Bill to the smallest point by granting the proposed powers only to such natives as attained the position of District Magistrate, and to them only ex officio.

"The Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces points out that the exercise of judicial powers is not one of the natural rights of man, and that a European is generally better fitted than a native to try any case in which a European is accused. But he would give the powers conferred by the Bill to native District Magistrates and Sessions Judges, on the ground that they would generally be men educated in England, and knowing English thoroughly.

"The Chief Commissioner of British Burmah submits what is perhaps the most extraordinary opinion of all. He would have preferred to leave the law unaltered, for he thinks no practical reason has been shown for making a change. He finds that opinion in British Burmah, official and non-official, is hostile to the suggested change. If the question concerned only Burmah, he would advise the dropping of the Bill. But with regard to India the case is different, and, looking to the character of the opposition, he thinks that the Government should proceed with the measure.

"Before leaving the local Governments, it may be mentioned that the Commander in Chief in Bombay, though he records no minute, yet is strongly opposed to the Bill, on a ground which I believe was never before taken—namely, that if the native civilians are taught to consider as a stigma the incapacity to try Europeans, the native officers of the army will learn the same lesson, and hold it a stigma that they are not allowed to sit on a European court-martial, or to command European troops.

"I pass now to the High Courts. It is already well known that eleven out of the twelve Judges of the Calcutta Court altogether condemn the Bill, while the twelfth, a native, approves it. Madras shows greater differences of judicial opinion. Chief Justice Turner would confer the jurisdiction over Europeans, in cantonments only on Europeans; in non-regulation provinces only on Europeans, and on native covenanted civilians selected by competition in England; and in regulation provinces on such Europeans and natives as the Government should select, on the recommendation of the local High Court. Mr. Justice Kernan says that as it is announced in the statement of objects and reasons accompanying the Bill that the Government has decided to remove all race disqualifications, he presumes the Bill was sent to the Judges merely to obtain their opinion as to whether it would accomplish this object—already decided upon. He thinks it will. Mr. Justice Kindersley believes that the time has not yet come for the change proposed. Mr. Justice Muthuswami Aiyar approves the measure.

"The Chief Justice of Bombay, Sir Charles Sargent, before going on furlough, recorded a minute approving the Bill. Acting Chief Justice Bayly strongly objects to the Bill, and denies that any native Judge or magistrate is fit to try Europeans. The Advocate General also opposes it. Mr. Justice West says that the Bill, as framed, goes lengths for which no one is prepared, and has been brought forward in a manner which few would think discreet. He considers, however, that it is now impossible to yield its principle; but he would for the present limit the operation of the measure to native covenanted civilians, and would give every European offender the right to claim trial before a European magistrate. Mr. Justice Scott would associate a European with the native magistrate in all cases where a European was brought before the latter. Mr. Justice Latham would confine the jurisdiction arising under the Bill to Sessions Judges, District Magistrates, and covenanted civilians. Mr. Justice Nanabhai Haridas thinks that the Bill does not go far enough. Mr. Justice Pinhey would give the powers in dispute only to covenanted civilians; and considers that it is unnecessary, impolitic, and inopportune to give them to statutory civilians also.

"The Allahabad Judges also submit separate minutes. Chief Justice Stuart regrets that the Bill was introduced so hastily, and with so small a demand for it on the part of the natives. He thinks that great difficulty will be experienced in ascertaining whether a particular native is fit for the powers to be conferred. He would advise the appointment of selected covenanted civilians only, and in all important cases where a European was charged, would not allow the native magistrate to hold a preliminary inquiry without previous notice to the district High Court. Mr. Justice Oldfield sees no immediate necessity for the Bill. He would confine the jurisdiction over Europeans to covenanted civilians, and thinks that a measure of this kind cannot be introduced with too great caution. Justice Straight, Brodhurst, and Tyrrell submit a joint minute. They quote ten years' statistics to show that no difficulty or inconvenience has yet arisen, or is likely to arise, with reference to the disposal of cases against Europeans. They go on to say that they do not oppose the grant of jurisdiction to native covenanted civilians who attain the position of district magistrate or judge: but they wish emphatically to declare that if this concession be granted, it should only be made with the plain and positive intimation that it is in no way to be regarded as a precedent, or as a basis for future agitation in the direction of the other proposals contained in the Bill.

"The above analysis of the opinions of the provincial Administrations and Judges, brief and necessarily imperfect as it is, will, I hope, suffice to show that the Government is not justified in claiming as supporters of the Bill all who do not advocate its actual withdrawal; and that the English public should suspend its judgment until the full text of the minutes is before it.

"I must pass very hurriedly over the reports of the subordinate officers and persons officially consulted. This necessity is the more to be regretted as the district officers are the persons best qualified to pronounce upon the merits of the measure, both as being engaged in the actual administration of justice, and as being the only class which comes in contact with non-official Europeans outside the Presidency towns, and which has opportunities of observing the native magistracy in the discharge of its daily duties.

"Taking, first, the Bombay province, the least unfavourable to the Bill, it appears that fifty officials were consulted. Of these, five are in favour of proceeding with the Bill as it stands, three consider it premature, twelve, including the Commissioner of the Southern Division, advocate some kind of compromise, while thirty, including the Commissioner of Sindh and the Commissioners of the Northern and Central Divisions and the legal Remembrancer, are for a complete withdrawal of the proposal.

"In Madras, out of seventeen European opinions, five of which are those of associations, only one is in favour of the Bill as it stands, two are given for a compromise, and fourteen are for withdrawal. Of the six natives consulted, one is for withdrawal, one for a compromise, and four for passing the Bill. Among the native opinions is that of Sir Madhava Rao, who, while approving the Bill, thinks it would be unwise to pass it so long as the present opposition to it continues.

"In the Punjab, out of twenty opinions of Europeans, there is not one in favour of passing the Bill, four advocating a compromise, and sixteen recommending an entire withdrawal. Of eight natives' opinions, all are for passing the Bill.

"In Coorg, of three European opinions, all are for withdrawal; while of the three native opinions, one is for withdrawal and two are for proceeding.

"In Hyderabad, of eight opinions of Europeans, seven advocate withdrawal, and one is for passing the Bill.

"In British Burmah, the only opinions given are those of the five Commissioners of Divisions. Three of them would withdraw the Bill, two would pass it; but of these two, one disapproves of its principle, and the other admits that his opinion is opposed to that of all the officers whom he has consulted. The Recorder of Rangoon also opposes the Bill.

"From the North-West Provinces ten opinions of Europeans have been submitted. Eight of these advocate withdrawal, two a compromise; and only one opinion (a native's) is sent in, which favours the passing of the measure.

"In the Central Provinces eight opinions are given, of which seven are for a withdrawal and one for a compromise.

"From Ajmere Mhairwara there are two Europeans for withdrawal, one European for a compromise, and one European and one native for passing the Bill.

"In Assam, all the district officers consulted, fourteen in number, recommend the withdrawal of the Bill.

"Lastly, in Bengal, forty-five Europeans and thirteen natives advocate a withdrawal of the Bill, while nineteen natives and an American missionary support it, and not a single voice is raised in favour of a compromise. The majority includes the legal remembrancer and all the divisional commissioners. The American missionary admits that he finds his congregation to be generally opposed to the measure.

"The following are the approximate numbers of the official opinions sent in upon Ilbert's Bill, excluding the heads of Governments and the High Courts. Europeans in favour of passing the Bill, 13; for a compromise, 36; for withdrawal, 173—total, 222. Natives in favour of passing the measure or a compromise, 49; for withdrawal, 15—total, 64.

"The Pioneer publishes the following in a leader:—

"So pronounced is the feeling against the Ilbert Bill in some quarters where such a feeling might least be expected that an influential section of native society in Calcutta is meditating a memorial to the Viceroy praying him to withdraw it."

"A number of meetings have been held by opponents of the Bill in different parts of the country during the past week. The most important were those of the Darjeeling planters at Kurseong, of the railway and dockyard employees at Bombay, and of the general European population at Lucknow, Sukkur, and several other places. At all of them resolutions were passed calling on the Government to withdraw the Bill, and pledging the persons present to continue the agitation against it.

"Rain has fallen during the past week in the North West Provinces and Oudh, but the fall has been unequally distributed, and in many places it was too scanty to benefit the crops.

There has been a good rain throughout the Punjab, but more is wanted. The prospects of the crops are much improved."

"Yakoob Khan's party has lost one of its chief supporters by the death, at Bagdad, of Sirdar Mahommed Sharif Khan, the youngest brother of the Ameer Shere Ali. He was deported to India in 1872, and was allowed to go to Bagdad.

"An iron mine has been discovered at Kaja, near Gandamak.

"The Ameer is said to be interesting himself in the development of the mineral resources of the country."

THE MISCHIEVOUS BENGAL TENANCY BILL:— THE FINANCIAL STATUS OF THE ZEMINDARS.

We publish below an abstract of an interesting and very significant statement which originally appeared in the "Report of the Revenue Administration of the Lower Provinces for the official year 1852-53." The original shows in detail, district by district, the number, jumma, and average jumma of all estates under the Board of Revenue, whether permanently or temporarily settled, classified according to the amount of jumma. Prepared from returns specially obtained from the district Collectors under orders of the Board of Revenue, and digested under the immediate superintendence of a thorough statistician and distinguished revenue officer, Arthur Grote, Esq., then Secretary to the Board, whose signature it bears, it is as reliable a document as could possibly be obtained on the subject; and the tale it tells of the wide-spread poverty of that particular people who are generally supposed to be the richest, is painful indeed. The leading officials of the day and particularly those who have interested themselves in the passing of that ungodly measure of wholesale robbery, the Bengal Tenancy Bill, as well as the pack which has taken up the cry of these leaders, are most eloquent about the wealth of the Zemindars and the hardships they inflict on the poor ryots; but the facts disclosed in the statement show that the bulk of those who have been so maligned against are even worse off than those whose miseries have so affected official sympathy. In order to understand the true import of the figures tabulated, it is necessary to bear in mind what the average of the profits of the zemindar is. It has been officially estimated from 40 to 50 per cent. of the gross rental, but remembering that the original decennial settlement allowed the Zemindar only one-eleventh, and in the temporarily settled districts it varies from 33 to 40 per cent., and that it is now subject to Dak, Road, and Public Works Cesses, amounting to about 13 per cent., it would be excessive to take it at so high a figure as half-and-half, 28 per cent. would most probably be the maximum, but, in the absence of definite information such as an analysis of the Public Works Cess returns would afford, but which the Government has hitherto withheld from the public, and to disarm all possible cavil, we will, for the purpose of this note, take it at 50 per cent. or the highest figure, i.e., half-and-half of the gross rental. Now to turn to the table. The second column shows that amidst a population of sixty millions there are barely 206,576 separate estates. It is not known by how many persons they are held. In some cases several estates are held by the same person, and in others a single estate is held by several co-sharers; assuming for the sake of convenience, in the absence of definite returns, that the two classes balance each other, we shall, we fancy, not be far wrong if we take the total number of estates to represent also the total number of Zemindars; i.e., there were just 206,576 Zemindars in the Bengal Provinces in 1852-53. There have been since a great many amalgamations and merging, reducing the total number of estates to 1,48,234 in 1878-79, but the Butwara laws and the Hindu law of inheritance must have at the same time greatly increased the number of Zemindars; but again, in the absence of information, we must leave the changes alone, and confine our remarks to the figures as shown in the Board's returns. The changes effected will not, when defined, materially alter our deductions. Taking the figures as above shown, we have 2,06,576 Zemindars in a population of 60 millions, or 1 in every 2,909, or in round number, say 3,000 of the people. Now, out of this total, 43,477 pay, and therefore according to the estimate, receive, at an average, barely four annas and six pies per head, per annum. The Government found these so troublesome and unprofitable that it allowed them to commute their holdings at ten years' purchase, when it declines twenty-five years' purchase for states of a higher figure. A second group of 22,396 persons get 0-11-7½ per head per annum, and a set of 70,057 persons, wax rich on three rupees eight annas and four and three-fourths per annum. We feel convinced that there is no sane man in India who will doubt for a moment that these 1,35,930 persons on an average income of Rs.2-8-0 per annum, are infinitely worse off than the ryot whose miserable condition the officials so cordially commiserate. In fact, they are ryots in every sense of the word, and earn their livelihood either by farming, or by day labour. Taking the first six headings together, we have a total of 1,97,499 persons out of a total of 2,06,576 who live from year's end to year's end on an average of Rs.3-0-11½, or a little under Rs.7 a month, and these are the monsters who suck the life blood of the ryot, and to knock down whom the officers of Government have buckled on their heaviest armour. Sympathy for the poor and the oppressed, protection of the ryot, the duty of Government, and fifty other political shibboleths of the day, have been brought forth to justify the unholy warfare against these miserable beings on an income which would not suffice for a decent table servant in Calcutta. To certain persons in England whose very existence as members of society depends on the sensational—who would be civilly dead if they could not bring forth their daily quantum of romance—it may be all very well to descend from popular platforms upon the enormity which these wretches commit in distant lands—to raise a chorus of owe on the supreme necessity for moral pocket-handkerchiefs for them—but we fail to perceive how the highest officers of State, most thoroughly familiar with the people of the country and their conditions and resources, could for a moment harbour the idea that these poverty-stricken Zemindars on Rs. 7 a month could, in the presence of the British Indian Government and its stringent laws, of British Judicial and police officers, in spite of heavy stamp fees and ruinous law charges, oppress the people by twenty-seven different kinds of illegal cesses. It would be a slur upon their experience and knowledge to suppose that they do not know how the case stands, as it would be an unpardonable insult to them to suppose that knowing it, they have deliberately set up a false cry to prejudice public opinion. We do not care to deny that most of the cesses, if not all of them, have been raised in Bengal, even as all the crimes described in the Penal Code have been committed in India; but we believe that no more will the plodding collector and the astute commissioner who compiled the list will hold that all of them have been imposed by any one Zemindar, than they will insist that any one criminal has anywhere committed all the offences of the Penal Code. Offences against the law are not peculiar to any one community. They are noticeable in every country and in every state of civilisation; only they are more prevalent among some people than among others. The prevalence can be ascertained by reference only to statistical returns, and by comparison of the same with returns from other countries. This is the only test, and we are ready to abide by it with reference to the charge against Zemindars for exacting illegal cesses. And in this respect the evidence entirely fails to support the assumption of the Government officials. The criminal returns published in the administration reports of the Bengal Government are singularly silent on this point. There are not twenty cases of extortion of illegal cesses to be noticed in them in the course of a year. Nor can this paucity be explained by the assumption that the ryots are afraid to prosecute their oppressors. Those who combine by hundreds and thousands to withhold rent and to drive their Zemindars at bay, who are constantly engaged in litigation with their Zemindars, who make light of assassinating the naib or breaking the heads of his followers, who have not unoften evinced their delight in converting the Zemindars themselves into mince meat, would be the last to sit still under high-handed extortions by them. The fact is, what are in official language called illegal cesses are mutual voluntary adjustments; the Zemindar is satisfied with what the ryot cheerfully gives him without trouble, and the ryot readily pays something in lieu of enhancement of rent. And so thoroughly was Sir George Campbell satisfied with the voluntary character of the so-called cesses that he entirely abandoned the crusade with which he started his gubernatorial career.

The second group of our statement contains what may be called the middle-class of our Zemindars. They represent a total of 8,638 persons with an average annual income of Rs. 3,210-8-4, or Rs. 229 per month; but most of these persons have parted with their direct power by farming out their estates in Patni, and cannot therefore be very oppressive; at any rate compared to the total their number is exceedingly small. Thus we dispose of 2,06,135 persons out of our total of 2,06,576 Zemindars under the Lieutenant Governorship of Bengal. We have yet 441 persons with an average income of Rs. 72,464 3-2 5-6ths. Financially they are well situated to do harm, and, as we happen not to be among them, we would gladly purchase cheap popularity by crying with the officials, "down with them." But are they really the monsters that communistic commissioners and sentimental collectors represent them to be? A little insight into the state of the country would have at once shown these officers that most of these bele noirs which so much excite their phrenzy are even more incapable of doing harm than they themselves. Most of these big Zemindars are annuitants, living on the rents of Patnies, and have no more power to approach the ryots than the fabled man in the moon. Thus we hold that the great bulk of the Zemindars, technically so-called, do not, and cannot, commit the mischief which is laid at their door. That there is a large amount of mischief going on in the country, we do not for a moment wish to deny, but it is not the great body of the Zemindars who are guilty of it. Among the middle-class of the community there are a great number of Talookdars, Patnidars, Darpatnidars, Sepatnidars, and a host of other tenure-holders who, having taken their tenures at a heavy price, both in bonuses and in rent, have to recoup themselves in a variety of ways for their outlay, and to them is due a large amount of the oppression which prevails in this country, and it is this class which the Tenancy Bill proposes to multiply by making ryoty holdings saleable. Well off as the ryots are in many parts of the country, there is yet a vast amount of indebtedness, and free sale can only mean a licence for the immediate transfer of the ryots' farm to Indigo planters and money-lenders, who will become the middle men themselves, liable to no enhancement, but at perfect liberty to enforce rack-rent to the utmost extent possible. In other words, the conversion of the ryot to a day labourer is the goal to which the would-be friends of the ryots would drive them, and well may the poor of this country cry, "save us from such friends."

MEETING OF THE RAJSHAH LANDHOLDERS TO PROTEST AGAINST THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

AN influential meeting of the landholders of the district Rajshahi was held in the circuit house at Nattore on Sunday, July 30. Almost all the landholders of the district were present at the meeting either personally or by proxy; and Raja Pramatta Nath Roy Bahadur, of Dighapatiya, was in the chair.

The following resolutions were passed:—

Resolution I.

That this meeting is of opinion that the new provisions contained in the Bill without giving anything in return, curtail the existing legal and customary rights of the landlords for the purpose of giving to the tenants advantages which they have never asked for, and that therefore such provisions are one-sided and unjust.

Resolution II.

In the opinion of this meeting, these provisions of the Bill will not be an unmixed good to the tenants, will be positively injurious to the landlords, and will foster litigation to such an alarming extent as to be decidedly detrimental to the welfare of both the sections of the landed class, therefore this meeting humbly place on record their unqualified protest against these provisions of the Bill.

Resolution III.

That a committee with power to add to their number, be appointed to represent to the Legislature the objection of the landholders of Rajshahi to these provisions and to propose any suggestions they may think fit. That the committee be further authorised to consult, co-operate and act in unison on behalf of the landlords of Rajshahi with any person or body of persons, or to raise funds for the purpose of furthering the objects of this meeting.

Resolution IV.

That the following gentlemen be appointed to form the committee with power to add to their number: Raja Pramatta Nath Roy Bahadur, Babu Raj Kumar Sircar, Babu Kali Mohun Montra, chief adviser to the Nattore Junior Branch, Babu Giridhar Roy, Dewan to Raja Kristender Roy of Bolihar, Babu Shoshi Rhuson Roy (Dubalhati Dewan), Babu Govind Prasad Sukul, Chaudhury Fazler Rahaman Khan; and Babu Raj

Kumar Sirkar be appointed Secretary and Treasurer to the Committee.

THE SUPPORTERS OF THE BILL.

"WHEN one compares the meetings which have been held in London against, and in support of Mr. Ilbert's Bill, one is struck by a special characteristic of those meetings. The meeting against the Bill found assembled together men who had practical experience of India in the widest and best sense of that term, both in, and out of, the public service. If they were non-official Anglo-Indians, they were men who had worked well in India, and who had spent their lives mostly in the mofussil, and in work, the permanent results of which, must be an inheritance of good for the people of this country. Then, the public service was represented by men who had served in all the presidencies, and served with distinction. All branches of the service were represented by men who had held foremost appointments, and whose reputation was not confined to the mere locality in which they had laboured. When we turn to the meeting in support of the Bill, we find a strongly-marked general experience, just as in the meeting to oppose the Bill we find a strongly-marked experience. Lord Stanley of Alderley cannot claim to be in any way an Indian authority. He made a speech not long since at a meeting of the East India Association which was simply a marvel of ignorance, indeed, it was a wonder how any intelligent man, having opportunities of acquiring even a book knowledge of India, could have fallen into such errors. Then, there is Sir Charles Hobhouse, a man who oscillated between Simla and Calcutta, but who failed to shine in India. His experience of the country is not of a kind to enable him to speak with authority upon the application of such a measure as that which would extend the criminal jurisdiction of natives over Europeans. We next come to Sir John Budd Phear. A more earnest, painstaking, well-meaning individual never came to Calcutta. Sir John Phear, when in Calcutta, posed as in a special manner a friend of the natives. He even gave his daughter a native name; yet his knowledge of the natives did not extend beyond his domestic servant, a few clerks, and the cream of native society at the capital. Sir John Phear knows nothing of the peculiarities of life in the mofussil; and occasional visits to famous places, like the Orissa shrines, are not calculated to supply the experience most needed to enable a man to judge as to how Mr. Ilbert's Bill would be likely to work. With the English professors and theorists we need not trouble ourselves. Professor Thorold Rogers is not usually considered a man whose opinion upon an Indian question would command very great respect. Who would venture to compare Sir Charles Hobhouse with Sir Alexander Arbuthnot, Lord Stanley of Alderley with Mr. J. D. Mayne, or Sir John Phear with Mr. Seton-Karr, Mr. Alexander Rogers, or indeed any of the speakers at the meeting to protest against the Bill? If the two meetings be compared, the weight of authority on one side is so great, as to make the want of authority on the other side so painfully apparent as to be ridiculous. As we have said, it is experience of India against the Bill, and inexperience of India in favour of the Bill.

Curious to say, the very class with which Sir John Phear was most familiar is the very class of native society which has kept aloof from the discussion. The true leaders of native society, the men who habitually associate with the best European society, and whose ranks would supply the best candidates for Lord Ripon's favour, are those who keep aloof from the open discussion of the measure, and who do so because their opinion is opposed to it. The men who keep up the agitation in support of the Bill are a very long way down the social scale, and are men who aim, not at leading the best sections of their countrymen, but the sons of their countrymen. Those who have hitherto in this matter come most forward amongst the natives cannot boast of any man of mark in their ranks, or as their leader. They appeal, not to the best-informed native opinion, or to the most intelligent, native opinion, but to schoolboys, and to an immature opinion chiefly. In fact, we might most correctly describe the agitation by saying, it is an appeal to the dissatisfied amongst the class who have received a more or less artificial education in English. This being so, it is of importance that the English people should distinguish, so far as the measure is concerned, between what is represented by its opponents and its supporters, respectively. When they understand that if the Bill be passed, it will do violence to the experience of the generation which has done so much for the Empire since the days of the Mutiny; and when they understand, further, that, it is not desired by that section of the natives by whom alone it could be safely worked, but that it is desired by Europeans inexperienced in mofussil life, and by a group of native demagogues and professional agitators, who in their organs in the Press, and at their meetings, declare they desire the Bill because it is, in their idea, the first step in "a reform of the government of this country," and the first step to assimilating the Indian to the Colonial system; when the people of England come to understand all this, they will think twice before applying a naked principle to a community whose condition will assuredly bring shame upon that principle.—Indian Daily News.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A BENGAL JUDGE ON THE ILBERT BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I have perused the Special Supplement to your publication of the 28th August, and entirely agree with what has been written in the "Plain Statement about the Ilbert Bill for English Readers."

I have also read almost everything which has been written or spoken either for or against the introduction of the Bill, but have failed to find any experience given to the public, from those officers who have been for years employed in trying cases in Indian courts, and which would show what certainly will be the effect of the Bill. Having lived for thirty-five years amongst the natives of India, during half of which time I was Magistrate, and the other half a District Judge, I may be allowed to speak with some authority on the subject to those who have had no experience of India. The introduction of this unfortunate Bill has been looked upon in a very wrong light. It has been represented to them as a matter simply between the Europeans and a few native magistrates, to whom the passing of the Bill will make them amenable, and therefore they have failed to see why it should have raised such violent opposition. I have no doubt also, that it was looked upon in the same point of view by Lord Ripon himself, when he was first induced to bring the matter forward. This is quite erroneous and misleading—the real way of considering the question being as between Europeans and the native magistrates' Courts, not only the native magistrates themselves but their surroundings.

I have had great experience of native courts, having had, as judge, many subordinate courts, the strict supervision of which the High Court were always impressing upon district judges as the most important of their duties. Some of these have been presided over by highly-educated and respectable natives, for whom I have always entertained the greatest respect, and as far as they themselves were concerned, the most perfect confidence. This feeling has frequently led me to pity their position, in consequence of the disrespectful manner to which they have been constantly subjected, not only by those attending their courts, but by the low native pleaders and ministerial officers by whom they are always surrounded, and over whom they are powerless to exercise any control. And this simply because they are themselves natives. They have no firmness in upholding the dignity of their courts, and commanding that respectful demeanour which their position on the bench not only entitles them to, but which is absolutely necessary for the proper discharge of their duties. I have frequently entered their courts when least expected, and found nothing but uproar and confusion, pleaders on both sides talking down each other in unseemly language, and the native Judge awaiting in hopeless despondency the termination of the pleadings, if such can be so called. In an instant, on my approach, all this has subsided, and on my remonstrating with the native Judge, he has frankly confessed his inability to stop it. Under such circumstances it is not difficult to surmise to what insults and indignities a European may not be subjected when, alone and friendless, he stands at the bar of such a court, charged with a criminal offence, especially if the charge be a false one, and which, if not known or strongly suspected by a native magistrate himself, is so by everybody else in court. This, instead of creating sympathy, only adds to the violent feeling against him, with the view of upholding the false charge for which many have been freely paid.

There are many reasons why native judicial officers are rendered helpless to keep their subordinates under proper control, besides their want of firmness, which to them is a natural weakness. These have been frequently made subjects of conversation between them and myself, during which they have complained privately against those whom they dare not openly accuse or punish, for fear of counter false charges being brought against themselves of bribery and corruption, or gross irregularity of some kind. I have had instances of native judges coming to me, and entreating me to take such and such a case out of their courts, because a decision against certain parties would lead at once to charges against themselves, and which, let them be ever so false, they fear will lower them in the sight of their superiors, and stand in the way of their promotion.

If the native magistrates were alone concerned in the trial of Europeans, I should fear no miscarriage of justice, but in a court such as I have described all the mischief intended will have been done before the case is ready for hearing. Native police, native amlat, and native pleaders will have done their worst, and all that was intended to be done, for the object for which the false charge will have been brought having been accomplished, their endeavours will then be to prevent a conviction, from fear of an appeal, when probably, in the absence of those who have been conducting the proceedings in the lower court, detection would probably follow, and punishment be meted out.

The false charges which will be brought against Europeans will seldom be allowed to proceed to a conviction, for reasons which I have stated above. Their acquittal will be a relief to the native magistrate, and to those who have conducted the false charges against them; the former will look on their acquittal as a credit to himself, and flatter himself, that, with the release, all the irregular proceedings, of which he must have been cognisant, but powerless to prevent, will quickly pass into oblivion; while the minds of the latter will be made easy by getting rid of the chance of detection. To those who are ignorant of India it may seem strange why false charges should be brought against Europeans, and they point to a conclusion, that if they act honestly and justly towards the natives, they need not fear the effects of the bill. I will endeavour to explain.

Europeans in India are scattered over the country, sometimes miles away from each other. They have numerous native servants under them, say in the indigo concern or tea garden. In their neighbourhood is a landed proprietor, who covets a piece of land which is attached to the tea garden. He knows he has no right to it, and therefore avoids a civil suit for its possession. He, however, thinks that if he can get the European manager away for a time he could easily take forcible possession of it. He, therefore, causes one of his servants to burn down a hut, and then accuses the European manager of having done it. The native police then visit the spot, hear the evidence of the witnesses, and as the charge is an unobtainable one, the European is arrested and kept in a wretched police-station for about two days; when he is forwarded to the magistrate, who will then, perhaps, for appearance sake demand security from him. Of course, having no friend at court he is unable to furnish any, and is, therefore, committed to gaol pending his trial, the evidence to be produced being kept back by the police as long as possible. In the meantime his affairs are kept under the care of his native servants only, who are powerless to protect his interests, while the Zemindar roots up all the indigo or tea trees, as the case may be, ploughs up the land, makes a trench around it, and then attaches it to his own land. Having thus gained his object, he has no motive for pressing his charges, but is obliged to follow them up to save appearances. He therefore sends one of his servants to the native magistrate's court to give his deposition against the accused, at the same time giving his servant to understand that he does not wish him to be convicted. The deposition is taken and the evidence of the witnesses recorded, and these proceedings are kept in the record room of the court against him for years. The witnesses being also duly coached give contradictory evidence, which is immediately taken advantage of by the native magistrate to dismiss the charge; and then all the parties to this nefarious outrage are at ease. The native magistrate has got rid of a disagreeable case, and the others of all fear of detection, while the poor European having suffered all the indignities and insults to which he could be subjected, retires to his home disconsolate, quite helpless to recover either his property or his reputation, knowing that it would be quite useless to have recourse to a civil suit against his powerful opponent, and which would have to be tried in another native court. Having also lost his influence over his own people, a repetition of similar treatment would probably follow any act on his part at which they might take offence.

This is by no means an exaggerated instance. The records of our Indian courts abound with such as between native and native, and when Europeans are made amenable to the native courts by the passing of the Ilbert Bill, they will be subjected to the same treatment. English readers may ask, why should not false charges be brought against them before a European magistrate? Why only in courts presided over by native magistrates? Because in the former they dare not do so, whereas in the latter they have everything their own way; the native magistrates are afraid to interfere with the police, afraid to offend the pleaders in their courts, and afraid to check the irregularities of their ministerial officers, for fear of the consequences to themselves, to which I have alluded above.

I have known instances in which native magistrates have stretched their powers to the utmost to annoy European planters, by summoning or arresting all their servants at a time when their services were absolutely necessary for carrying on the manufacture of indigo, and this on false charges brought against them by those at enmity with the planter.

It is very unfortunate that this Bill should have been brought forward when there is so little in its favour, and so much against it, and I have no doubt that Lord Ripon regrets it more than anyone else. Why then should he fear to withdraw it? By doing so he can only offend a few Bengalees, but even if he should lose his popularity amongst them generally, he has only to withdraw the Rent Bill to regain it, a bill that will raise more dangerous class feelings than the Ilbert Bill has done. Let him replace matters as they were before either of these Bills were thought of, and all will be well.—I remain yours obediently,

F. C. FOWLE.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE NATIVE PRESS ON THE RECENT OUTRAGES.

THE fact that two cases have recently sprung up in which low class natives have been convicted of outrage upon the modesty of European ladies, suggests certain reflections which we shall take the liberty to give vent to. We may safely dismiss the charge of "superior instigation" brought forward by certain writers whose vocation is mischief. That native gentlemen have a respect for the tender sex, that they consider such attempts at outrage to be abominable, will not take as long to prove. Nor need we consider whether these outrages are of recent growth, or whether they are common occurrences in Anglo-Indian society, the individuals whereof did not think it worth while for decency's sake to punish them to the world. If the latter be the case, we need not dwell upon it much at length. But if the outrages be of recent growth, we should try to find out the causes of it. We do not believe, we think it is a libel to say, that they are the results of instigation. The cause seems to us to lie in another direction, and it has been suggested to us in the course of a recent stroll which we took through the streets of Calcutta. It may lie (1) in the contemptuous way in which European ladies and gentlemen view their low caste servants, and (2) in the culpable manner in which the police neglect their duties in watching over the picture shops of Calcutta. To take the first, we fear it is a fact that European ladies and gentlemen do not consider their menials as almost human beings, and hence they think that they may take all sorts of liberties and do many things which masters and mistresses should rather have done in their absence. Of course, it is impossible to amplify this subject with examples and illustrations. But to take one of the cases referred to above, what was the actual fact? A punka-bearer actually entered the room in which the lady was sleeping, and he entered it through the doors which were left open. May we ask why the doors were left open? This is also alleged to be the fact in the case recently reported as having occurred in the house of a well-known judge, but which has been pooh-poohed by some of our contemporaries as similar to the case of Lady Florence Dixie—a matter purely of hallucination. The doors were left open, through which it was easy for any person to effect an entrance. That shows to what temptations the ladies themselves put their servants. They are rude, unlettered people, and you cannot imagine the effect which such temptations such as this are likely to produce on their minds. But European ladies and gentlemen seem to suppose that their menials are too contemptible to be held in any consideration, and hence they suppose that they might act or comport themselves in any manner they liked. But there is such a thing as training even in lewdness, and the disregard of menials which may pass unaccompanied by serious results in one generation, may be productive of very great mischief in another. The moral of this is evident. It may be stated thus:—"Do not ignore your menials; but in all places and on all occasions, keep them at a safe distance from yourselves." The second cause is more serious, and we earnestly draw the attention of Government and the police to it. Has any gentleman taken a stroll through the Chitpore-road and other streets, where there are picture shops? The keepers of these make no secret of their tastes. They have understood their patrons well, and so they do not fear to keep exposed to the gaze of every passer-by pictures of persons in a state which we need not describe. Native women are represented covered with a flimsy stuff in a way which it is simply disgusting to behold, while European members of the other sex are brought to view in a more shocking way which should not for a moment be encouraged. Now these pictures are intended for all classes of persons, but while some only can afford to buy them, it is for the lower classes to behold, study, and enjoy them every time that they pass by the shops. May we ask if the effect of these exhibitions can ever be good? The upper and middle classes may be let alone, for whatever the effect upon their minds, they are not likely to indulge in the dastardly acts of outrages. It is the lower classes that come constantly in contact with Europeans; it is they who are admitted to their most private apartments, who are honoured with a trust which is often unlimited, and who can take any advantage they like of the freedom granted to them. Is it for the interest of the community that these should be daily fed with the sight of lewd pictures, that their evil propensities should be roused, that they should be gradually brought to think that the women whose likenesses they see are the countrywomen of those whom they call their mistresses? These thoughts, such a stimulus to passion, such a training in lasciviousness, they daily go through while passing through the streets, and we are afraid there is none to suppose that it is these men from whom the greatest dangers to European households may be expected. We sincerely hope the police will take steps to remove the nuisance. Some of the pictures exhibited are frightfully obscene.—The Liberal.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1883.

IS THERE ANY DEMAND FOR THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL?

THE English nation as a whole has accepted Mr. Gladstone's Irish land policy, and has accorded it a full and fair trial, on the acknowledged ground that it is an extreme and exceptional attempt to cope with an extreme and exceptional political danger. The teachings of political economy, and even the dictates of justice and equity, have been consciously and deliberately violated, on the principle Salus reipublicæ summa lex. There are, of course, many Liberals as well as Conservatives who hold that not even a high political necessity can justify confiscation without compensation. There are some who doubt whether a policy condemned by political economists as unwise under ordinary circumstances, can rightly be held to be wise in an emergency. But however this may be, there can be no question that the spirit of the age is such, that neither the outcries of vested rights nor the warnings of political economy avail to stop a remedial measure that promises any very great immediate political gain.

We may therefore take it for granted that, however undeniable may be the vested rights of the Zemindars of Bengal under the Permanent Settlement, or by immemorial custom, or otherwise, all such considerations will be promptly swept aside by our root and branch administration, if the advocates of the Bengal Tenancy Bill can show any great or widely distributed gain from its probable operation, or even any strong demand, intelligent or the reverse, for its introduction.

But has there been any demand for this legislation? And will it benefit any section of the community, if it be forced into law? We believe that both these questions must be answered with a decided negative. Leaving the reply to the latter question for consideration hereafter, we proceed to offer some evidence on the issue raised in the former question.

Lord Ullick Brown, Commissioner of the Cooch

Behar and Rajshahi division, wrote on Feb. 1, 1881:—

"No strong and special grounds, political or other, exist in the present case, nor are they asserted by the Commission who indeed seem. . . to be unanimous in holding what it is a nearly universal opinion, v.z., that the ryots of Bengal are stronger than the zemindars."

And again:—

"Not only there is no general feeling of discontent among the ryots in whose favour it is now proposed to sacrifice the zemindars, but that there is not even a partial feeling of that nature, and that the ryots of Bengal proper, at all events, are, as a body, in a prosperous and contented condition. . . . Lastly, I think the passing of such measures into law would create no little discontent among the zemindars as a body, though being loyal and well affected, they will bow to the decision of Government."

Mr. Beames, the Commissioner of the Burdwan division, wrote on April 26, 1881:—

"I am not aware that any section of the community in Bengal has suggested or manifested any desire for new legislation on the rent question."

It is certainly true that some worthy philanthropists, entirely ignorant of the circumstances of the country, and deluded by the irresponsible chatter of those professed agitators, whose mission in life seems to be to sow strife between class and class in India, have lately been representing the ryots of Bengal as the dumb, down-trodden victims of the landholders of that province. But what say those whose opinion is really worth having—those who know the country intimately, and have made the welfare of its ryots their life-study? We need only quote one opinion, that of Sir Ashley Eden; for it is at once the highest authority that can be cited, and so emphatic and unwavering as to be absolutely decisive on the point. In 1877, after an extended tour in the interior, the late Lieutenant Governor recorded the following remarks on the condition of the agricultural population:—

"Great as was the progress which I knew had been made in the position of the cultivating classes, I was quite unprepared to find them occupying a position so different from that which I remember them to occupy when I first came to the country. They were then poor and oppressed, with little incentive to increase the productive powers of the soil. I find them now as prosperous, as independent, and as comfortable as the peasantry, I believe, of any country in the world; well-fed, well-clothed, free to enjoy the full benefit of their labour, and able to hold their own or obtain prompt redress for any wrong."

It may be said—indeed, it has been said by the fanatics—that this very clear and outspoken declaration of Sir Ashley Eden referred only to the population, admittedly rich and prosperous, of Eastern and Central Bengal. It is, of course, a fact that in Bengal, as in every other country in the world, there are parts where the agricultural population is not so well off generally as in other parts. In the lower provinces this is probably the case in Behar, owing to the greater pressure of the population on the land and to other causes. But in 1881, in addressing a deputation of the Behar landholders, Sir Ashley Eden thus spoke of the condition of the rural population in that portion of his satrapy:—

"I can assure you that nothing has given me greater pleasure than to notice, as I have had ample opportunities of doing, the extraordinary improvement in the condition of the people. It is made manifest in a hundred ways daily, even to the most casual observer. I hear the same story from all classes, official and non-official, and it is a matter for general congratulation."

"This improvement is due to various causes: first and foremost, to several succeeding harvests, plentiful almost beyond the recollection of the present generation, and these full harvests followed years of trial and famine; next there has been, with growing prosperity, an increase in the value of land, a general awakening of the cultivating classes, and an improved knowledge of their legal rights and privileges, and this has, I hope, been accompanied by a strict administration of the law. Then there has been a greater readiness on the part of landlords to recognise and affirm the rights of cultivators, and I hope that this may to some extent be due to the influence of your association."

Such, then, was the condition of affairs in Bengal, before the "reforming" fury of Lord Ripon let loose upon that unhappy province the destroying angels of his anarchical theories, freshly imported from Ireland. There was a peasantry contented, fairly prosperous, and rapidly advancing both in wealth and in knowledge. There was a landlord class more and more inclined "to recognise and affirm the rights of cultivators." Above all, there was concord between landlords and tenants; and there was entire confidence in the good faith and benevolent intentions of the Government on the part of both classes.

Now, whilst this iniquitous measure is under discussion, what do we already see? We see Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea and his friends of the Indian Association calling on the ryots to come forward and demand emancipation from the chains with which the exuberant fancy of the Calcutta orators has bound them. We find the zemindars everywhere meeting to record their unavailing protests against the spoliation with which they are threatened. And we find discontent and disquiet in every corner of the land.

And if Lord Ripon persists in forcing through his Radical proposals, what must be the results? We shall have the zemindars impoverished and disgusted, harassed by the Government demands on the one side, and by the hostility of the ryots on the other. We shall have a huge new class of middlemen created, the purchasers of the share in the land that is now to be taken from the Zemindars and given to the ryots—a class of middlemen unburdened by those responsibilities which are so worthily discharged by the best Zemindars, and which operate as check upon even the worst—a class of middlemen, whose chief virtue will be their amenability to taxation, unlimited by the awkward stipulations of the Permanent Settlement, and whose function in life will be to squeeze the unfortunate cultivators. And we shall have, below these middlemen, the vast bulk of the cultivating population reduced to the miserable condition of day labourers, the coolies of those who shall have succeeded to these filched rights. The Government alone will have benefited financially for a large share of that property which is now guarded from enhanced taxation by the Permanent Settlement, will be freed from that restriction; but at what a terrible cost of broken faith, of lost confidence, of blighted loyalty!

GOVERNMENT BY COOKED TELEGRAMS:

LORD RIPON'S Government has been at it again. Incredible as it must appear, after the humiliating disclosures that attended the discovery of the intrigue of the famous "Cooked Telegram" of March last—an intrigue which, as it turned out, was known only to the Viceroy himself and to the "inner circle," not to the Supreme Council at large—there seems every reason to fear that a similar trick has again been tried at Simla, in telegraphing to every corner of England—again under the disguise of a "Reuter"—a garbled account of the opinions of the local authorities on the Ilbert Bill. After the severe criticism to which the earlier shady transaction was subjected, both in the Press and in Parliament, it can hardly be possible that the same mysterious and underhand means have been employed again this time, in obtaining priority for Lord Ripon's version of these all-important documents. We must, of course, wait for further information, before we can exactly understand the means by which this great advantage was gained for the supporters of the Bill. But inasmuch as the documents were only published in Saturday's Gazette, whilst Reuter's telegram was despatched from Simla on Friday, and was published in every town in England on Saturday morning—and inasmuch as further, we now learn that these documents constitute a large volume of some 500 closely printed pages, requiring some time and labour to digest—it appears, unhappily, only too certain that this shocking telegram was, like its predecessor, concocted by official aid.

Our readers will undoubtedly study for themselves, by the light of the Times telegram, the astounding mis-statements of the official, or quasi-official, version. We can best illustrate the enormity of those mis-statements, as well as the shameful advantage given to Lord Ripon by their universal dissemination through Reuter's agency, by quoting a few words from two of the innumerable hymns of triumph, that were chanted on Saturday and Monday by all the Radical newspapers in England, over the discomfiture of the wicked opponents of Lord Ripon. We might quote dozens of similar articles from other Radical journals in every part of the kingdom—without, alas, any security that a correction will ever overtake, in many parts of England, one of the most audacious falsehoods ever known in English political history. This is what the Western Morning News, one of the most widely-circulated papers in the West of England, teaches its readers on the strength of the Reuter:—

"Magna est veritas! The people who said only the other day that nearly all the local authorities in India were opposed to the Ilbert Bill, and who, when Mr. Cross denied it, practically gave him the lie, have to sing very small to-day. The facts are as Mr. Cross states them. Even the Times has to publish the statement, so contrary to the information of its talented correspondent, that out of a total of 140 Indian provincial authorities, 114 are in favour of, and twenty-six opposed to, the principle or policy of the measure. . . . Though public opinion at home is in favour of the Bill, and the provincial authorities in India are in its favour, and the withdrawal of the measure would be a great injustice to the natives, inflicting upon them a disappointment certain to lead to disaffection, yet the Times opines that 'it would be more statesmanlike to acknowledge frankly the error which has been committed and withdraw the Bill altogether.' At the same time it admits that the compromise offers a method of avoiding the worst evils which have been anticipated; as, though not expressly excluding statutory civilians, it will in effect prevent them from ever being set over Europeans. Now we hope that the Times is in error, and that the Bill will be passed as it stands. Its applications may be left to the Government."

THE Bristol Mercury says:—

"The Government of India yesterday published a number of opinions forwarded by provincial authorities in reference to the Ilbert Bill. Contrary to the statements made in certain London journals which advocate the selfish views of the opponents of the Bill, 114 of the opinions are in favour of the measure, and only twenty-eight against it."

And again, in a subsequent issue:

"We have had occasion more than once to expose the worthless character of the statements brought forward by those who wish to discredit the policy of the Marquis of Ripon, and particularly from professional prejudice and race animosity, to throw out the Ilbert Bill. Those of them who had buoyed up their hopes, with the statement of the industrious fabulist at Calcutta, who had telegraphed that the opinions of the local authorities were nearly unanimous against the Bill, will be considerably discouraged by the authentic summary which was furnished to the Mercury and Post on Saturday through Reuters' Agency. It appears that out of 140 Governments 114 report in favour of the Bill, as consistent with enlightened English policy in India, and only twenty-six against, so that the principle of the measure is surely established. It would be, however, most imprudent of its supporters to imagine that it is therefore safe; the opposition is of such a character that it will fight to the last, and stop no means of rejecting the measure. But the case for the Bill is too strong for them now, if steadfast effort is made to see that its strength is justly appreciated, and that it is protected from misrepresentation. The sound principles of Liberalism will secure a fresh and noble victory, and Indian native judges will gain what common sense cannot deny them."

NEVER has the immense value to India, and to the interests of truth, of the weekly Times telegram been so strikingly demonstrated as on this occasion. Even when exposed after an interval of only two days, it is very certain that the impression created by the Reuter, which is demonstrated by such articles as those above quoted will never be entirely effaced; but if the falsehood had had three weeks start of the truth—as it must have had, but for the Times telegram—the exposure would have had positively no effect at all. As it is, even the Pall Mall Gazette is forced to affect an unwonted frankness, and to admit that “there is no denying” the “extraordinary discrepancy;” but it proceeds, with all the accustomed ingenuity of Radical casuistry, to attempt to find a loophole of escape for Lord Ripon by insinuating that Reuter after all may be right. It says:—

“On the strength of this discrepancy the Times, with reckless readiness of vituperation, at once jumps to the conclusion that Reuter’s telegram is a lie, and a lie concocted by the Government of India. Now Lord Ripon and his advisers may be knaves, as the Times promptly suggests, but they are not quite such fools as to send a false telegram, in order to have twenty-four hours’ start of their opponents in influencing English public opinion. There is as yet no conclusive evidence that the figures of Reuter’s telegram are wrong, as an impartial judge might classify the opinions very differently from the partisan correspondent of the Times. Even if they are wholly wrong, the mistake may be purely accidental. Lastly, should the mistake prove to be not an accident but a genuine misstatement, what proof is there that it emanates from the Government of India? That Government, the Times argues, once made use of Reuter, therefore whenever Reuter goes wrong it must be the doing of that Government. It is by such reasoning as this that the Times seeks to justify the indecent haste with which it rushes to bring the most odious charges of dishonesty against our Indian administration.

It is needless to point out that the Times does not by any means argue that “whenever Reuter goes wrong it must be the doing” of the Government of India; the Times argues—as every sane person who is acquainted with the facts must argue—that the mere consideration of the time at which Reuter’s Agency obtained its information (to say nothing of the precedent of the former “cooked telegram”) shows that that information must have come from an official source. But the effrontery of the Pall Mall Gazette is really sublime when it says that Lord Ripon and his advisers “are not quite such fools as to send a false telegram in order to have twenty-four hours’ start of their opponents in influencing English public opinion!” Indeed?—then, was it all a hideous mistake about the former Reuter?—that described official members of Council as “independent” members, that suppressed or minimised all the opposition to the Bill in the Legislative Council, that in fact gave Lord Ripon’s view of the Bill and the debate, that was written by an official, revised by Major Baring, paid for by Lord Ripon, and that appeared in all the English papers as a “Reuter” without the word “official” (which had “slipt out in transmission!”) Seeing that this interesting document was finally republished as a Parliamentary return on the motion of some sceptical M.P., it is impossible not to admire the audacity which can thus calmly ignore what is really a matter of history.

Among the many mischiefs wrought by this miserable Bill, not the least seems to be the amazing demoralisation produced by the extraordinary fanaticism of its supporters. One of our contemporaries suggests that Lord Ripon will be chiefly famous in Indian history for his attempts “to Reuterise English opinion;” and there can be no two opinions as to the extremely discreditable nature of the tactics that have been employed by the supporters of the Bill throughout this unhappy controversy. Only last week, one of the most reputable papers in England, the Leeds Mercury, published a paragraph, on the authority of “a correspondent,” to the effect that the “British India Committee” had been holding a “series” of largely attended meetings in various parts of London, in support of Lord Ripon’s policy and the Ilbert Bill, in which opportunities had been afforded to the opponents of the Bill to speak, but the latter had not dared to say a word—whence it was of course concluded that London public opinion was all in favour of the Bill. To the best of our belief, the whole statement is a simple fiction! We, at any rate, have heard of no such meetings for free discussion convened by the supporters of the Bill; on the contrary, the admission to Mr. Bright’s meeting was strictly by card—and we believe that the only other meetings in support of the Ilbert Bill have been those of one or two “select” Radical clubs. As the Times very justly remarked of the cooked telegram, in its powerful leader yesterday morning, all this sort of thing is an innovation, and a very deplorable one, in English political life.

SINCE the above was written, a letter from the Secretary to Reuter’s Company has appeared in the Times, stating that, on telegraphing to the Simla correspondent of the Agency for an explanation of the “extraordinary discrepancy,” the astounding discovery is made that—exactly as on the occasion of the former famous telegram, and exactly in the same direction—“a most serious error occurred in the transmission of his telegram over the wires.” All readers will agree that the error was indeed “most serious,” when the Secretary goes on to explain that “instead of 114 opinions being favourable and only 26 contrary. . . . the figures actually sent by our correspondent were 114 in favour of, and 205 (!) against the principle and policy of the Bill!”

In examining very briefly this explanation, we should in fairness, at the very outset, state clearly (what was also stated by the Times in its leader yesterday) that no intelligent observer will think of blaming Reuter’s Agency for the present, any more than for the former, contretemps. As we have shown above, the information is clearly seen to be official, from a mere consideration of the dates. All that can be said against Reuter’s Agency in the matter is, that it was wrong—and, after former experience, highly imprudent—in being more careful that the word “official” was not prefixed to the telegram. The prefixing of the word “official” would, doubtless, have weakened the force of the telegram as a manifesto in favour of Lord Ripon’s policy; but it is strange that the Agency has not learnt the absolute necessity for this precaution.

The foot-note which the Times adds to Mr. Griffith’s letter, without any comment, is quite sufficient to show the unsatisfactory nature of the explanation which the unfortunate Simla correspondent is forced to offer. The Times points out that the exact words of the peccant telegram were, “Out of a total of 140, 114 are in favour of, and 26 opposed to the principle or policy of the measure.” It does not require a high order of intelligence to perceive that the words “a total of 140” are entirely incompatible with the assertion that “26” was substituted for “205” in course of transmission. The total obtained by adding 114 and 205 is, clearly, 319, not 140. It is obviously incredible that a mere “error in transmission” could have altered both the 205 and the 319 into exactly such figures (26 and 140) as work out with the 114. It is, of course, perfectly likely that an error might have occurred in one, or even in both; but the least suspicious person in the world would certainly suspect "cooking" somewhere, when, after two prodigious errors, the net result can be made to "prove," as a schoolboy would say of his sum. If the peccant telegram had run thus, "Out of a total of 319, 114 are in favour of, and 26 opposed," &c., the Simla explanation would have been intelligible. As it is, we must clearly await further enlightenment.

On arrival at Dinapore, the battery will be made up to regulation strength by transfers from other batteries now serving in India. The following went out with the battery :—Major Curtis (in charge), Lieuts. Gordon, Rogers, and Callwall. The drafts prepared by the 2nd Royal Irish Regiment for the 1st Battalion in India numbers nearly 400 of all ranks. The men have passed the medical test, and on Saturday the white helmet was issued to them. They will embark on the 12th inst. at Portsmouth, on board her Majesty's troopship Jumna, which will sail via the Cape, in order to avoid contact with cholera on the Suez Canal. Major Dixon will have charge of the draft.

ROYAL ARTILLERY FOR INDIA.—Orders have been received at Sheerness from the War Office directing the 2nd and 3rd Batteries, 1st Brigade, Scottish Division, Royal Artillery, to be in readiness to embark for India on Friday next. The men will leave Sheerness, where they have been quartered for the past three years, by rail for Portsmouth, and then embark upon her Majesty's Indian Troopship Serapis. No. 2 Battery is under the command of Major T. W. Roberts, and on arriving in India it will be converted into a mountain battery, taking over the equipment of the 8th Battery, 1st Brigade, Eastern Division, stationed at the Murree Hills, Bengal. The officers accompanying No. 2 Battery, which numbers sixty non-commissioned officers and gunners, are Major Roberts, Captain H. C. C. Walker, and Lieutenant R. D. Gubbins. The 3rd Battery of the 1st Brigade will proceed to India under the command of Major T. C. Price—who has completely recovered from the injuries he sustained a few weeks since by being thrown from his horse at a military inspection—and the following officers,—Captain C. H. Richards and Lieutenants R. T. Anderson and C. J. Hoblyn. Fort William, Bengal, has been selected as the station of No. 3 Battery.

THE EAST INDIA SQUADRON.—Letters from the Commander-in-chief at the East India station, dated Aug. 14, state that H.M.S. Euryalus and Tourmaline are at Mauritius awaiting orders, and that the Dryad returned to Tamatave on Aug. 13. H.M.S. Ranger, which was at Mauritius on Aug. 28, would leave for Tamatave. H.M.S. Harrier and Undine, stationed at Mozambique Channel and Comoro Islands, are cruising at their stations. H.M.S. Briton proceeded about July 13 to Aden, with despatches from Zanzibar; and the Dragon left Tamatave on Aug. 4, with despatches, for Zanzibar. H.M.S. Osprey proceeded to Zanzibar, from Colombo, on July 14, to keep up communication with Tamatave.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The tenders for Rs. 25,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on Wednesday at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were:—In telegraphic transfers on Calcutta for Rs. 11,00,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7<sup>5</sup>/<sub>32</sub>d. Tenders at 1s. 7<sup>17</sup>/<sub>32</sub>d. will receive in full. Between April 1 and September 4, the total amount of remittances sold reached Rs. 8,25,46,350, and realised £6,681,834.

INDIAN GLENROCK GOLD MINING COMPANY.—The directors have received the following information from their acting manager by last mail:—"Have completed the crushing of all the quartz at the reduction works, with the following result:—Quartz crushed: Bittusal, 285 tons; Korumber, 40 tons; total, 325 tons. Produce, free gold per ton: 2dwts. 23gr. Bar gold obtained: 48oz. 11gr. Blanket concentrates, 14 tons, assay 102. 19dwts. 15gr. per ton." The above report indicates an average yield of 4dwts. 16gr. per ton all round. Arrangements for treating the concentrates were complete.

INDIAN VOLUNTEER PENSIONS.—A Royal Warrant, respecting the pensions of men who volunteer from the Indian forces, has just been promulgated to the Army by direction of the Secretary of State for War. It states that "should the military service, or the incidents thereof, of a soldier who, on volunteering for general service from our Indian forces to our general forces, elected that his pension should be calculated in accordance with the regulations of our Indian forces, appear to our Commissioners of Chelsea Hospital and to our Secretary of State to merit a pension for which provision is not found in those regulations, the award of such pension may be made with the consent of the Lords Commissioners of our Treasury. A list of the pensions thus specially granted shall be laid before Parliament."

THE INDIAN CRIMINAL PROCEDURE BILL.—The Coventry Liberal Club recently passed the following resolution, which was forwarded to Mr. Gladstone:—"Resolved, that this meeting records its hearty approval of Lord Ripon's Indian policy as being in accord with the principals of just and enlightened progress, and earnestly hopes that it may receive the undivided support of the Liberal party." A reply has been received as follows:—"Sir,—I am directed by Mr. Gladstone to inform you that he has received the communication which you have done him the honour to send him, and to convey to you his thanks for the expression of approval and confidence in Her Majesty's Government which it contains.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, G. LEVESON GOWER.—Mr. John Poole, Coventry Liberal Club."

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE RYOTS OF INDIA.—Sir William Wedderburn, of the India Civil Service, on Wednesday attended a special meeting of the directors of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, and laid before them an outline of a project for establishing agricultural banks or loan associations in India. The proposed loan associations, he said, were intended to relieve the ryots, and anything which tended to improve the position of the agricultural population of India, could not but increase the demand for English goods. It was proposed that the loan associations should not charge more than 9 per cent. interest on the money they lent, and to obviate the difficulties of collection that now existed, the Government, who were the chief landed proprietors, and who were, therefore, in a special manner interested in promoting the prosperity of the ryots and the productiveness of the soil, were willing to give their assistance and collect the interests through the machinery used for getting in the land revenue. The British Consul at Alexandria had reported an increase of 80 per cent. in the imports of machinery into Egypt, and had ascribed this to the purchase of agricultural machinery by the aid of similar associations to those, the establishment of which he (Sir W. Wedderburn) was advocating in India. All the conditions were favourable to the prosperity of the ryots, but they were in want of money. A vote of thanks was given to Sir W. Wedderburn, who it is understood will bring the subject more fully before a meeting of the Chamber during next month.

PRODUCE MARKETS.—Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson state that in the Produce Markets quotations again show some irregularity, as buyers do not extend their operations, and speculation is restricted. Brazil coffee supports the late advance, with a fair demand. Other descriptions are steady, but rather quiet, part of the supply at auction, including East India, being withdrawn. The Netherlands Trading Company declare for public sale on Wednesday, the 12th inst, 110,870 bags Java, and 450 cases Padang, against 95,200 bags in September last year. Good ordinary Java is now quoted 29 cents, against 26<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub> to 27 cents in 1882 (the lowest price on record). The market for cane sugar is without improvement, and the week's business on the spot very limited. Three cargoes of West India sold for the United Kingdom at 19s. to 20s. per cwt. Beet for shipment in the next three months is a shade firmer in price. No alteration can be quoted in refined. The consumption of sugar in the United Kingdom is largely on the increase, being in eight months about 61,000 tons more than during the same period of 1882. The public sales of China tea have been smaller than for some time past, which rather strengthens the private contract market. Indian teas are in good supply, and remain without material alteration. Cocoa has been more readily disposed of. At the spice sales, Zanzibar cloves have further receded in price. The high value of black and white pepper has at length restricted the speculative demand last reported.

INDIAN TEA.—The auctions have included 14,000 packages of the new crop, mostly tea of superior quality, which meets with ready sale at firm prices. Low grades are attracting more attention, owing to the small proportion in the new crop. The best results have been obtained by the Darjeeling Company, who realised an average of 2s. 3d. per lb. for a very few choice shipments, the top quotation being 3s. 10<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>d. per lb. Manufacture in India continues rather behind last year in quantity.

THE SILVER MARKET AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.—On Thursday about £20,000 worth of bar silver brought by the Chilean steamer Galicia was disposed of at 50<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>d., while Mexican dollars were still nominally quoted at 49 5-16d. per ounce. Apart from a slight advance in the Calcutta rate to 1s. 7<sup>17</sup>/<sub>32</sub>d., all Eastern rates of exchange were unaltered. Rupee Paper remained at 83<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub> to 84 for the Four-and-a-Half, and 80<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub> to 81 for the Four per Cents., but business was dull. The India Council notifies the sale of two lakhs of telegraphic transfers on Calcutta at 1s. 7<sup>17</sup>/<sub>32</sub>d. per rupee.—On Saturday no change took place in the condition of the market. Business was inactive, and previous rates were repeated. The exchanges from the East were without change.

LIARDET'S "BOAT DETACHING GEAR."—This new invention consists of two slotted, tumbling hooks, the ends of which are housed into guards in order to prevent accidental unhooking, and also obtaining additional holding power; the hooks are so connected as to tumble simultaneously on the release of a line held by the coxswain (with the aid of a turn round a cleat) until he thinks desirable to let go, whether before or after the boat becomes water borne. The same appliance which releases the boat is used for hooking on by simply hauling on the releasing line; it does not depart from the form of a "common hook," which every sailor understands, and can safely and easily handle in the dark, which is a great boon to sailors in heavy weather. The hooks can be attached to the blocks at end of falls or on the thwarts of boat, and any tackle can be utilised for hooking on. Boats fitted with this gear are able to lie alongside without fear of coming unhooked, and there is no possibility of releasing herself if struck by a sea when at the davits, and is not dependent on safety pins. Any towing strain whatsoever, either bow or stern, assists releasing not hindering, and thereby a boat can be lowered and released in perfect safety without stopping the vessel. The inventor is exhibiting full-size sets of his gear (constructed of phosphor-bronze) at the Fisheries Exhibition, Space 308, Block Y, Division 7, Western Gallery, Great Britain; also at 14, Fenchurch-street, London, E.C. It is well worth a visit to view this new invention, as we consider it will be the means of saving many lives, as often is the case when lowering boats in heavy weather, one end of the boat is through accident lowered before the other, and becoming detached thereby swamping and upsetting her and often losing valuable lives in endeavouring to pick up one. Mr. Liardet's gear dispenses with all these dangers, it is simple in construction, occupies very little space, is cheap, and after many experiments with this gear, all of which have proved successful, is being adopted, which argues well for its success.

It is believed that Mr. Nanabhai Haridas will be confirmed in his acting appointment as a judge of the Bombay High Court.

The public meeting at Calcutta for the purpose of memorialising the Governor General regarding the Ilbert Bill had been fixed for the 23rd August.

THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EX-PRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THEREON, INDIAN OPINION ON THE ILBERT BILL.

INDIAN OPINIONS ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL. &c.

THE ILBERT BILL.

THE following telegram has been received through Reuter's Agency:—

"SIMLA, SEPT. 7.—A large number of opinions of the provincial authorities upon the Ilbert Bill are published to-day. Out of a total of 140 there are 114 in favour of, and twenty-six opposed to the principle or policy of the measure. Among those who approve of the bill, are the Governor of Bombay, the Governor of Madras, the Lieutenant Governor of the North Western Provinces, the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, the Chief Commissioner of British Burma, the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, the majority of the members of the High Courts of Judicature in Madras, Bombay, and the North Western Provinces, and the majority of the members of the Chief Court for the Punjab. The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, the Chief Commissioner of Assam, the residents at Hyderabad and Rajpootana, the Commissioner at Kurg, and all the members of the Bengal High Court of Judicature, with the exception of the native Judge, are opposed to the bill. The chief arguments adduced in favour of the measure are that it is in accordance with the policy of the Indian Government—that if the native judges are fit for the position they occupy they are competent to try Europeans; that the existing law produces administrative inconvenience, and that natives already possess jurisdiction over Europeans in the Presidency towns. On the other hand, the reasons advanced against the bill are that the educational attainments of the natives do not counterbalance the material difference which exists between their feelings and customs and those of Englishmen, and further the indefeasible right of the latter to trial by their peers. It is also urged that the bill jeopardises the personal safety of Europeans; that there is a material difference between town and country; that the measure will create rather than remove administrative inconvenience, and will have an irritating effect upon the growing harmony between the two races; that it does not bear the stamp of finality; that it will alarm capital; and that the Indian law already recognises a large number of exceptional privileges."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—In consequence of the extraordinary discrepancy between our Simla telegram of Friday last and the telegram contained in the Times of to-day, in reference to the published opinions on the Ilbert Bill, our correspondent was asked by telegraph to furnish an explanation. From his reply it appears that a most serious error occurred in the transmission of his telegram over the wires; that instead of the 114 opinions being favourable and only twenty-six contrary, as received by us, the figures actually sent by our correspondent were 114 in favour of, and 205 (two hundred and five) against, the principle and policy of the bill, both including European and native officials and non-officials.

This explanation fully vindicates our Simla correspondent from the charge of sending a misleading telegram. None the less, it will be our duty to inquire into the serious blunder made by the telegraph officials.—I am Sir, your obedient servant,

FREDERICK J. GRIFFITHS, Secretary.

Reuter's Telegram Company (Limited), 24, Old Jewry, London, E.C., Sept. 10, 1883.

[** The exact words of the Reuter's telegram as received and published by us were:—"Out of a total of 140 114 are in favour of, and 26 opposed to, the principle or policy of the measure."]

MORE COOKED TELEGRAMS.

LORD RIPON will, we suspect, be famous in Indian history quite as much for his attempt to Reuterise English opinion as for his dangerous experiments in legislation. Anything more impudent than the misrepresentation of the drift of official opinion on the Ilbert Bill contained in Friday's telegram we cannot imagine. According to the note supplied by the Viceroy's private secretary—we assume that the same procedure has been followed in this instance as on the first occasion—to the obliging telegraphic agency 114 official opinions were in favour of and twenty-six opposed to the principle or policy of the Ilbert Bill. The truth is (as the Times telegram shows) that, excluding the heads of Government and the High Courts, 188 of the officials consulted are for absolute withdrawal, thirty-six for compromise, and sixty-two for proceeding with the measure. The "compromises" suggested, we may remark, are fatal to what nearly all who in this country defend the proposal regard as its vital principle. In brief, they would emphasise the race disqualification against which they protest. We need discuss to-day only the question of authority, and on this subject we remark that among those who condemn most strongly this particular phase of the Viceroy's policy are many who have cordially concurred in his Local Government scheme. Again, we must point out that official opinion has been largely influenced by the simple fact that the Bill has been published. Many who urge that it cannot be dropped would add that it ought never to have been introduced. Lastly, let us note that of the natives consulted, while forty-nine recommend either persistence or compromise, fifteen advocate withdrawal. The importance of this declaration may be appreciated by any one who knows with what loathsome abuse the native organs have covered the natives who have gone against Young Bengal in the matter. Abuse to a native is a very different thing from abuse to an Englishman. To be the subject of vituperation is in itself in their eyes a disgrace, and very few native gentlemen indeed would, without extreme pain, incur the reproaches of the rancorous Baboo press. If so many as fifteen pronounce for abandonment, we may be sure that in the opinion of the mass the concession is absolutely worthless and unnecessary.—St. James's Gazette.

[TIMES.]

IN our Indian telegram this (Monday) morning will be found a summary of the official opinions upon the Ilbert Bill published in Calcutta on Saturday in the form of a supplement to the Gazette. It will be seen that a very extraordinary discrepancy exists between the account of these opinions given by our Correspondent and that which found its way to this country on Friday night. We ventured on Saturday to anticipate that a large number of the opinions claimed by the Government as favourable to its policy would be found on examination to give it a very qualified and doubtful support, but we confess that we were not prepared to find the case misstated with such audacious thoroughness. As the public had no opportunity of studying the bulky supplement to the official paper on Friday, it follows that the account transmitted to this country on that day must have been supplied from some official source, and consequently that no blame can attach to the well-known news agency through which it came. It is, unfortunately, not the first time that the ordinary channels of public information have been used, in connection with this very matter to convey a wholly erroneous impression.

of what has been done in India to the mind of the people of this country. So mischievous an innovation upon the methods by which English gentlemen have been accustomed to carry on public business contrasts somewhat oddly with the high moral tone taken by the supporters of Lord Ripon's policy, and if not checked will, we venture to say, leave upon his administration a stain which many sentimental measures will not suffice to wipe out. It was stated in what we must take leave to call the official telegram, that out of a total of 140 official opinions, 114 are in favour of, and twenty-six opposed to, the principle or policy of the Ilbert Bill. It will be seen by a reference to the summary given by our correspondent that the reversal of these figures would give an approximation to the truth, and that it is impossible, even by giving priority to the favourable opinions and leaving a portion of the others unnoticed, to arrive at any result that at all resembles the official statement. Excluding the heads of Government and the High Courts, there are thirteen European officials in favour of passing the Bill; thirty-six in favour of some kind of compromise, though there is no agreement upon its nature; and 173 in favour of its absolute withdrawal. Of the native officials consulted, forty-nine are in favour of passing or compromising the measure, and fifteen advocate its withdrawal. Putting Europeans and natives together, as is done in the official account, we get a total of 188 for withdrawal, thirty-six for compromise, and sixty-two on the most favourable computation in favour of going on with the Bill, making a total, not of 140, but of 286. It is quite possible that small rectifications may have to be made in these figures on a careful revision, but it is utterly impossible that any ingenuity can reconcile the official version in the roughest way with the truth.

Our Correspondent does not confine himself to a mere numerical summary, though we have found that most convenient for comparison with the meagre and deceptive statement provided for public consumption on Saturday. On the contrary, he furnishes details of the state of opinion in different provinces which will enable any one who likes to take the trouble to satisfy himself of the substantial accuracy of the general summary. Every detail is not given, hence absolute arithmetical agreement is not to be looked for between details and totals, but abundant evidence is at least presented to show that the official version has no sort of resemblance to fact. Witnesses have further to be weighed as well as counted, and it will be found that the preponderance of opinion against the Bill, though everywhere decided, becomes more overwhelming as we pass from districts which it would but slightly affect to those upon which it would press heavily, or, in other words, from provinces in which it has only an academic interest to those in which it would directly affect men's lives and liberties. The Bombay Presidency is the least hostile to the Bill because it would be the least affected by its passing, but of fifty officials consulted only five are for the Bill as it stands, three think it premature, and twelve advocate some compromise, while thirty are for its complete withdrawal. In Madras, out of seventeen European opinions one is for the Bill as it stands, two are for compromise, and fourteen are altogether hostile. In the Punjab out of twenty European opinions four are for compromise and sixteen for absolute withdrawal. Passing over some of the smaller provinces, where, however, the balance of opinion is uniformly in the same direction, we find that in Assam the district officers are unanimously in favour of withdrawal; while in Bengal forty-five Europeans and thirteen natives condemn the measure absolutely, and nineteen natives, aided by "an American missionary," who confesses that his flock are against him, wish to see the Bill passed. Thus we find that in Assam and Bengal, the two provinces which it is universally admitted that the Bill would most deeply affect, there is not a single European official, from the Chief Commissioner and the Lieutenant Governor downwards, who is not entirely opposed to it. These two provinces alone furnish more than double the number of hostile votes admitted by the official account; and Bombay alone, the province least interested in the matter, gives four more than the number telegraphed all over England as the strength of Lord Ripon's official opponents.

The compromises are, if possible, more suggestive than the absolutely hostile votes. As yet we have details of the opinions only of a few highly-placed officials, but they all display in different ways the profound distrust they feel of a measure which they do not absolutely condemn. The Governor of Madras would confine the operation of the Bill to covenanted civil servants. Sir Frederick Roberts thinks the native members of that class entitled to the same powers as their English colleagues, but he adds that no more natives should be admitted for the present. The Governor of Bombay would restrict the operation of the Bill to natives holding the office of district magistrate or sessions judge, which is another way of expressing the views of the Governor of Madras. The Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Provinces and the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces hold exactly the same opinion, while the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab would give jurisdiction to all native first-class magistrates, but only after a long period of probation and the passing of strict tests not applicable to Europeans. These recommendations mean nothing but this—"Your Bill is published, and we are all in a very awkward position; let it stand therefore in name, but let us all combine to deprive it of reality." We stated on Saturday the form of compromise favoured by the Government. The Bill as it stands proposes to give to all native district magistrates and sessions judges, in virtue of their office, the same jurisdiction as is now exercised by European officials of the same class, and also empowers the Government to confer that jurisdiction upon native covenanted civilians, statutory civilians, assistant commissioners in non-regulation provinces, and cantonment magistrates. The proposed compromise is that the Bill shall apply only to district magistrates and sessions judges. The only path to these dignities is through competitive examination and the covenanted service; so that all the statutory civilians appointed in India in defiance of the competitive system so rigidly enforced upon Englishmen, together with the other miscellaneous minor officials named above, are altogether excluded. The recommendation of Sir Frederick Roberts, that no more natives should be admitted to the covenanted service, is being largely carried out by the action of the natives themselves, who are no longer seeking admission by the difficult and expensive path of competition in anything like the numbers that once came forward. Thus, the Bill is practically whittled down to as fine a point as possible. Regarded as a grand measure of equality, as opening a way for some wonderful regeneration of the natives, and as removing the distressing anomalies incident to our Government of India, it is one of the feeblest products of emasculated sentimentalism. In the course of a few years it will bestow upon the "people of India" the enormous gratification of seeing three or even four representatives of a race which most of them despise, raised to high places and enabled to exercise jurisdiction over Englishmen. To effect that stupendous triumph of statesmanship it has already embittered every antagonism which it is the part of wisdom to soothe, and strained every relation which as sagacious ruler would aim at making easy. It will disturb arrangements solemnly ratified by the Legislature only ten years ago and resting upon a logical and reasonable basis, only to substitute something which rests on no basis whatever and possesses no finality. Ridiculously inadequate as it is for all the ends avowed by the Government, it is yet large enough to undermine a principle and to lend vigour to every mischievous agitation that ambitious Bengalees choose to get up. The Government can make but one, and that an imperfect, atonement for a monstrous blunder, and that is to put aside all thought of an insincere and shabby compromise, and give a much needed proof of the strength of character which Orientals respect, by frankly abandoning this ill-judged measure.

[DAILY TELEGRAPH.]

It is now at last known that the opposition to the Ilbert Bill among the Indian provincial authorities consulted by Lord Ripon's Government is absolutely overwhelming. An entirely false and misleading statement has, indeed, been telegraphed from Simla to the effect that out of 140 opinions collected from the Mofussil 114 were in favour of the rash measure, and only twenty-six antagonistic to it. How so mendacious or mistaken a declaration can have found its way from the Himalayas to London must be hereafter explained, for it is a mystery to Reuter's Agency; and inquiries, as will be seen by the Secretary's letter to our address, are proceeding. Non-official persons having the reports before their eyes tell us a very different and conclusive tale in the reversed direction. Their analysis of the collective judgments of the Indian provinces and districts presents a total of 222 official reports or minutes; and out of these positively no more than thirteen European officials are in favour of passing the Ilbert Bill; thirty-six recommend a compromise of some kind; and 173 urge, with more or less earnestness, the total withdrawal of the scheme. When it is considered that the minority of forty-nine, composed of the first and second classes of these, must have been largely biased in its deliverance by the wish—the natural and dutiful wish—to save the dignity of the Government, and that even this tremendously strong motive has failed to diminish the enormous majority of 173—Reuter's Agency now reports 205—against the foolish and mischievous measure, it may be seen what official India really thinks of it. As for non-official Anglo-Indians, the ominous spectacle has been lately twice exhibited of planters and merchants meeting in crowded assemblies to bind themselves not to accept the Ilbert Bill as law if it be forced upon them. To such passions and perils has this ill-advised and utterly unnecessary act of sentimentalism brought our peaceful Empire. If the Government of Lord Ripon must save its dignity by some hollow compromise, which will in reality shelve the stupid revolution, while affecting to maintain the principle, we will endeavour to preserve a decorous seriousness during the process. But we trust the Viceroy's Council will wash its hands of fallacious telegrams and dishonest summaries, and not tell the English public that its Bill is approved, when the fact is that the only European in the whole of Bengal who has declared in favour of it is a missionary from Boston.

[EVENING NEWS.]

THE Indian Government is not happy in its relations with the Reuter Company. We all remember the extraordinary telegram which was sent some three months ago purporting to report a meeting of the Indian Legislative Council on the Ilbert Bill, and how it was afterwards confessed that this, which looked, and was intended to look, like a public message sent in the usual way of business, was concocted in the interest of Lord Ripon's Government and charged to the Indian people. That most discreditable passage in the career of this most sinister Bill is now capped by another, which the public will be only too ready to believe is part of an organised conspiracy to distort the truth through the electric wire. A Reuter's telegram on Saturday published to the world the extraordinary intelligence that, of the official opinions which had been taken on the Ilbert Bill, 114 were favourable to that measure, and only twenty-six against it. Those who had studied the process of Indian opinion on this subject knew, of course, that this could not be true. Still, so great is their faith in Reuter, they almost wavered in their belief. They began to fear that some extraordinary conversion had taken place among the Indian officials—that the reverberation of the Radical clamour at home, or perhaps the thunders of the native press, had induced them to change their minds. To the Liberals, of course, the telegram of Saturday brought much joy. They affected not to be surprised at the result. They always knew it would be so. The moral force of the Ilbert Bill was something that no Indian official in his calmer moments could resist. And while there was great exultation among all Lord Ripon's friends, there was a corresponding bitterness of tone towards those who were charged with having misled the public in this matter. The Times was rudely taunted with the ill-success of its predictions. The Ilbert Bill, instead of being cursed, had been blessed altogether by the Indian officials. The triumph, however, of the Radical press has been a brief one. Once again it is discovered that Reuter has gone wrong about the Ilbert Bill. On the present occasion, unfortunately, someone has blundered about the figures. The secretary of the Reuter Company undertakes to explain, and we very much regret to say that his explanation is most unsatisfactory. The public are led to believe that the error has occurred in the Simla telegram during the process of transmission through the wires. Instead of 114 opinions being in favour of the Ilbert Bill and 26 opinions against it, there were 114 in favour of the Bill and 205 against. These last, says the secretary of the Reuter Telegram Company, are "the figures actually sent by our correspondent." If that is the case, then the matter, instead of becoming clearer, is rather more cloudy for the Reuter Company. The exact words of the telegram of Saturday, as published in all the papers, were, "Out of a total of 140, 114 are in favour of, and 26 opposed to the principle and policy of the measure." It appears, then, either that the figures actually sent by the Simla correspondent were not given as stated, or that they have been grievously tampered with in the process of transmission. 114 added to twenty-six make 140, nor is it possible that any mere arithmetical blunderer could have made 140 out of the addition of 114 and 205. The question is, Who is responsible for the words "out of a total of 140" in Saturday's telegram? The burden lies clearly upon Mr. Griffiths to explain how these words are to be reconciled with his explanation of the manner in which the blunder was made. That somebody has blundered is obvious; but for a blunder which, for a few hours, has been so much to the advantage of the Ripon policy, we ought to have a more consistent and intelligible explanation than that which has been assigned.

THE TEIGNMOUTH MEETING TO PROTEST AGAINST THE ILBERT BILL.

(From the Exeter and Plymouth Gazette.)

THE line of argument taken by a good many Radical partisans, and by interested agitators like the Baboo who recently held forth in Exeter, in regard to the Ilbert Bill, is assuredly not that which commends itself to the minds of Her Majesty's Government. There is every reason to believe that the Government, so far from treating with disdain, as some of their rabid and over-zealous supporters do, the opinions of Anglo-Indians, attach considerable weight to this unique demonstration. They would, in all probability, revert with joy, if they could, to the period when there was no Ilbert Bill in contemplation. This being so, they are fain to decide between the evils of pressing on the Bill in defiance of the Anglo-Indian community, and withdrawing it, in the teeth of the strong expectations which have been raised in the native mind. This view of the case does not detract from the extreme culpability of the policy of Lord Ripon. It rather adds to the gravity of the fault committed in arguing this question, we have maintained that the objections of the Anglo-Indian community to the Ilbert Bill are the crucial point on which the controversy should turn. It is not worth while to discuss sentimental contentions as "to justice to the natives," the capacity of the instructed Baboo, his intelligence and alleged uprightness, and so forth. We confess that in this matter our sympathies are chiefly reserved for our own countrymen, holding a dominant position of great difficulty and responsibility in a huge Dependency many thousand miles away. Lord Ripon, by a most unfortunate and misguided line of action, has placed these Englishmen in a position of cruel anxiety. To our mind he has failed in what was his first duty, viz., that of governing India in accordance with the prevalent opinion of experienced and trustworthy Englishmen on the spot. There is every reason to believe that the Government, in spite of their brave words, recognise this now, but their chief effort is not to do what is right so much as to get themselves out of a mess. This is the reason of the Ministerial hints as to "modifications." In harmony with this explanation are the opinions of those of the Indian officials, formally consulted, who do not recommend the withdrawal of the objectionable measure. There is not one out of the whole number who has spoken frankly and courageously in its favour. Mr. Grant Duff, Sir F. Roberts, Mr. Sullivan, the Advocate General, and the Chief Justice of Madras agree, indeed, in the opinion that, as they express it, the bill should "not be withdrawn." They are careful, however, not to say or suggest any more, and neither in this nor in any quarter do we find any justification for the foolish Radical advocacy which speaks of the Anglo-Indian community with contempt as a "mere handful of Europeans." There is room for hope yet that the voices of the people thus stupidly and shamefully disparaged may prevail, to prevent the sacrifice of our supremacy in India for the sake of saving the reputations of a few blundering English politicians.

McIntosh, Esq., F. Perret, Esq.

The President of the Association, Mr. J. J. Keswick, was supported by the members of the Council. In opening the meeting Mr. KESWICK rose and stated that the first duty before the members of the Association was the confirmation of the amended rules passed at the Special General Meeting, held on July 4. He would read them to the meeting. They were:—First, to add in Rule 4 (a), page (2); in the last line after twenty—"And of such representatives of Branch Committees as the Council shall appoint under Rule 13 A, provided that total number of such representatives shall not exceed twenty." Second, to add in Rule 13 (a), page (4); after Association in the fourth line—"It shall be lawful for the Council to add temporarily or otherwise to their number representatives of Branch Committees, provided that the total number of such representatives shall not exceed twenty." And third, to alter in Rule 27, page (7), in the sixth line, three-fourths to "one-half."

The proposal was seconded by the Vice President, Mr. A. B. MILLER, and on being put to the vote was carried unanimously.

The President then rose and said that it had been thought advisable to take advantage of the present gathering of the members of the Association to show them that the Council had not been idle. But before going into this part of the subject he could not do better than explain to those present the financial position of the Association which seemed to him to be highly satisfactory and which was as follows:—

| State of Funds.              |     |     |     |     | Rs.      |
|------------------------------|-----|-----|-----|-----|----------|
| Amount advertised ...        | ... | ... | ... | ... | 1,35,273 |
| Received not advertised ...  | ... | ... | ... | ... | 7,324    |
| Total ...                    | ... | ... | ... | ... | 1,42,597 |
| Less sum over advertised ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | 583      |
| Total ...                    | ... | ... | ... | ... | 1,42,014 |
| Members' subscriptions ...   | ... | ... | ... | ... | 7,510    |

Total received all accounts ... 1,49,524
At this announcement and at the statement of the chairman that one lakh of rupees had been invested in 4 per Cent. Government Paper, so as not to be idle, but still to be available for the purposes of the association, there was loud and continued applause. The President then went on to detail the way in which certain information had been communicated to friends and sympathisers in England, and read out a long list of the work in this direction which had been done by the council, and the reading of which provoked a hearty response from the audience. He also drew attention to the memorials which had been sent home:—

| Memorial.                     |     |     |     |     | Signatures. |
|-------------------------------|-----|-----|-----|-----|-------------|
| To the House of Commons ...   | ... | ... | ... | ... | 14,989      |
| To the House of Lords ...     | ... | ... | ... | ... | 13,139      |
| To H.E. the Viceroy ...       | ... | ... | ... | ... | 11,783      |
| To the Secretary of State ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | 12,254      |

He might also mention, and he was sure that every man there would be proud to learn that the English ladies of India had sent home a petition craving the protection of the Queen and bearing no less than 5,800 signatures. (Loud and prolonged applause.) Having thus placed before the meeting the general position and work of the association, the President went on to review the actual position of affairs in the following address:—

Mr. KESWICK: I think it would now be well to examine our present position with regard to the Ilbert Bill. The European and Anglo-Indian public have been very quiet of late, waiting for the Government to redeem its promise of giving the views of the local Governments and of the public the fullest weight and the most deliberate consideration. But there is reason to fear that the Government mistakes this quietness for indifference, and thinks it may safely pass the obnoxious measure without encountering any serious opposition. It is not right that the Government should deceive itself in this way; but, if it will live apart from the world, what are we to do? We have no wish to spring a mine on the Government, for we are interested in maintaining it in its strength. As Mr. Evans said in the Council Chamber, "The lives and the property of the Europeans are bound up in the safety of the Government of India." A Government cannot be strong, however, which will not be just to itself and to us, and it deceives itself if it does not recognise that there is serious discontent among Europeans and Anglo-Indians throughout the length and breadth of the land—discontent which its tardiness to do justice daily deepens. (Applause.) It is said that the Government has decided to publish the opinions received from the Local Government authorities on the subject of the Native Jurisdiction Bill in a collated form; but the remembrance that the debate of March 9 last was not only collated, but manipulated to an extent which caused the Times to characterise it as! “a petty artifice to influence English opinion—an artifice the imbecility of which was greater even than its unfairness”—shakes confidence, and the public desire is to see the opinions in their integrity, unbridged and un-collated. (Hear, hear.) We have seen it stated that there is no use in our attempting to resist the Bill as Government has determined to pass it; but it is our duty to show our objection to it to the last; and then, if Government will err and will deliberately alienate the respect of Europeans and Anglo-Indians throughout the country, it will do so with its eyes wide open. It must not think the trouble will end with the passing of the Bill. The application of it will be a thousand times more disastrous. (Renewed applause.) Look at the spectacle we have before us; a Government trying to force upon us a most obnoxious Bill, out of no necessity as has been proved, but because, as we are told, the Government cannot afford to be beaten. (Hear, hear.) It must do injustice that its paramount power may remain plain. It has made a mistake, but it must persevere in it, lest its dignity suffer in correcting it. It must rob us of our birthright, lest our native fellow-subjects mistake its justice for weakness. (Applause.) I believe all the advisers of the Viceroy have informed him that there is no necessity for the change he proposes, and that no judges can be so satisfactory for Europeans as European judges. That if we are to have the best justice obtainable, then we should have European judges. Surely, we Britons are not asking anything unreasonable when we ask for the best justice obtainable. (Cheers.) We have been accused of unreasonableness, and of want of sympathy with our native fellow-subjects—most unjustly accused. We have not desired to take away any of their rights, we only wish to defend our own. We have no wish to see native judges draw less pay than their European confreres. Pay them equally well by all means. We have no wish to see them done out of any honours. Make them all C.I.E.'s and C.S.I.'s if you will (laughter); but do not let them be judges over us in the Mofussil in criminal matters. All of us who are acquainted with Civil Courts in the Mofussil presided over by natives, know how reasonable we are in asking this, and the reasonableness is patent to most native Zemindars who know how these Courts are conducted. The Government does not intend to permit native judges to have jurisdiction over European soldiers in cantonments. The Commander-in-Chief was alarmed when he heard that cantonment magistrates might be subjected to the orders of native superiors. He wanted native judges to be able to experiment on civilians only. And we have recently noticed an order that native sepoys also are to be tried by Europeans only in future. (Cries of “Oh, oh.”) Are our voices not to be heard? We must make them heard. (Applause.) It is true that because we have no voice in returning a member to Parliament, the smallest constituency at home commands more attention from the Government of the day than the whole European population of India; but we must never be silent, and never sit down quietly under an injustice. (Hear, hear.) The Viceroy of India has hitherto been invested with very exceptional powers confided to no other subject of the Queen expressly for the purpose of maintaining the supremacy of the British race in a country where it is vastly outnumbered, and we must consider the employment of those powers for the avowed purpose of transferring authority from European to native hands without reference to the feelings and wishes of the Europeans affected by the transfer a most serious breach of public trust. (Great applause.)

Mr. A. B. MILLER said that the resolution which he had the honour to move ran as follows:—“That it is imperative, in the interests of the whole Indian community, native as well as European, that this Association should continue to exert its utmost energies to effect the withdrawal of the Criminal Procedure Amendment Bill.” He said: We have thought it right to take occasion by the hand, and to take advantage of this meeting, to ask you to share with us some responsibilities which we have felt very heavily lately. You have heard from the President to-day that your Council has not been idle. Yet for some time, as far as India is concerned, we have adopted, more or less, a policy of passivity, and why? Because we have been depending upon what we conceived would be a solemn pledge given by the Government to abide, not only by official opinion in India, but also non-official opinion. It is perfectly true that when the President of the Council gave that pledge, he in some way qualified it. But, gentlemen, it was only the ordinary qualification of a statesman, a qualification which prevented him from giving, in absolute terms, a pledge. There can be no possible doubt what its true construction was: Well, gentlemen, when this wretched Ilbert Bill was introduced, let us see what the grounds or arguments were which induced the Government to introduce it. It is useful, in order to see how far the policy of the Government is defended at the present moment. In the first instance, when the bill was introduced, the putative father was Sir Ashley Eden. The Government thought that they were bound to take immediate action upon his suggestion. It is one of the most extraordinary “anomalies,” if I may use the expression, that the whole history of the Bill is characterised by the extraordinary manner in which every one who has had anything to do with it, repudiates responsibility. No sooner is it stated that Sir Ashley Eden allowed this measure to be initiated, than Sir Ashley takes the first opportunity, when the matter becomes public, to repudiate the authorship. (Laughter.) It is no secret here that Sir Ashley Eden has written letters to gentlemen in the city repudiating with indignation and scorn the notion that he was answerable and responsible for this Bill. We know further, that in the House of Lords, opportunity was taken, and undoubtedly, under Sir Ashley Eden's instigation, to repudiate his responsibility for the Bill.

Well, Sir Ashley being held primarily responsible for initiating the measure, a further motive for proceeding with it is “the overwhelming consensus of official opinion.” We may take it, I think we are entitled to take it, that if this overwhelming consensus of official opinion” had been opposed to the Bill, it would not have been proceeded with. We know also that when the Bill was introduced, it was introduced a few days after the existing law had been established. The existing law came into operation in January and in February was this ill-conceived measure introduced. We were then told, with a sort of flourish of trumpets, that it had become necessary to introduce this measure, not only because there was a consensus of official opinion in favour of it, but because it was desirable to remove an “anomaly, great administrative inconveniences, and race disqualifications.” Well, if we admit these conclusions and test the Bill by these requirements, we shall find that the very essence of the Bill is the removal of race disqualification. When we look into the Bill and look for this removal of race disqualifications, what do we find? We find that, instead of the Bill being an enabling Bill, it becomes a disabling Bill; instead of becoming a qualifying Bill it becomes a disqualifying Bill—and in what direction? In the direction of disqualifying Europeans. This Bill, gentlemen, intended as it was to remove race disqualifications, seeks to carry out this object by imposing upon Europeans race disqualifications. (Hear, hear.) I am not going to take up your time with further discussion of the Bill. It has been thoroughly thrashed out, and the arguments which have been brought forward in support of it have been completely overthrown. In the debate in Council the sheet anchor, apparently, of the Government to which they finally clung, and the only anchor, was “administrative inconvenience,” though I am bound to say, that even this argument had been repelled and met by the emphatic denial of the Lieutenant Governor, than whom we could have had no better authority in the matter. What has been the history of this Bill since that memorable debate? Has the Viceroy, or have the Government, now any ground for saying that they do not know what public opinion is? Are they still entitled to say that this agitation is the agitation of a few Calcutta lawyers? Opinions have poured in from all parts and provinces of India. The consensus of opinion against the Bill is all but unanimous. (Applause.) There are, of course, still a few satellites which revolve round the sun at Simla, (laughter), and which reflect the light from Phoebus's throne, who profess still to support the original bill, but, gentlemen, they can be numbered on one's five fingers. (Hear, hear.) From all sides of India opinions have come in, from planters, from chambers of commerce, from trades' associations, so far as non-official opinion is concerned, and from the whole of the Civil Service, so far as the Civil Service is concerned, and I have not the faintest doubt, if it were possibly allowed by military law, that we should have the whole of the 60,000 European troops in this country protesting against the Bill. (Loud applause.) We now, therefore, stand in this position. We appeal to the Government to carry out their pledge. We should have a right to appeal to the Government, even if that pledge had not been given, and we appeal to them to withdraw this bill. We have a right to say to the Government “The whole European community is arrayed against your policy.” In any epoch, during the whole British administration of India, has there ever been such an array of public opinion as is now exhibited against the policy of this measure? (Loud applause.) I am not here to-day to say one single harsh word against our native fellow-subjects. My own opinion is, and it is founded upon my knowledge of the opinions of many respectable members of the native community, that they, to some extent, sympathise with us. With regard to the small number of Bengali agitators, why, gentlemen, they act according to their lights. They think they are carrying out the wishes of the Sirkar in crying out for this supposed boon. The time will come, no doubt, when they will find also that it is not wise policy to discourage European enterprise in India, and humiliate and depress the agency with which it is worked. Native prosperity is so bound up with the prosperity of the European classes that it is most suicidal policy on their part to attempt, in any way whatever, to lower our prestige. (Hear, hear.) We have only got to refer to the lectures which Dr Hunter (Fas est et ab hoste doceri) delivered in England to learn what has been done for India by European capital and the non-official classes. But a few years ago, a very few years ago, there was not a single railway in India. A few years before that, whole districts were depopulated and given over to wild beasts. Within the last few years money has flowed into the country, industries have been fostered, mills and collieries and jute factories have been established. Take tea alone, and look what the development of this one industry has accomplished in Assam. What does all that represent? and yet we are to be told, and we are told, I am sorry to say, by our fellow-subjects in England, as well as here, that we are to be subjected to the ignominy of being degraded from our legitimate status, and that we are to be deprived of our birthright—why, because our forefathers conquered India. (Applause.) I do not think we need blush for the association. I do not think it is necessary for us to blush for the deeds of our forefathers. We have a magnificent monument of their deeds in the present prosperity of the natives of India. (Loud applause.) Again, a comparatively few years ago in the history of India, property was all but worthless. A native never knew when he rose in the morning, whether he was still possessed of the property which he had the evening before. Now the value of landed property has risen enormously, and all these safeguards proceed from the energising influence of the Europeans. I do not think that we need apologise for the benefits which have been done by our forefathers. (Applause.) That speech of Mr. Bright is intolerable to us, because it shows that at home there is to be a settled policy, so far as the Radical Caucus is concerned, to destroy our privileges. This measure can only pass by means of a broken pledge of the Government. But the danger lies before us that all our other privileges may follow suit with the possibility of Mr. Chamberlain as Prime Minister, and Sir Charles Dilke as Viceroy. We may then expect that we shall be entirely and absolutely waived aside; that all our privileges will be confiscated; that we shall possibly be placed in the present happy position of the zemindars who profess to sympathise with the Ilbert Bill and be subjected, like them, to have our vested rights of property confiscated. I think that we are all now learning here to distrust this policy. We have seen the zemindars combining, and holding meetings of protest, because they have discovered that the same Radical policy which has invaded our privileges is equally bent on confiscating their property. I think we shall find, with regard to local self-government also, that, when the natives here find out that it must increase taxation, they will not be so eager to welcome the policy as they now profess to be. One word in conclusion. We have asked you now to share our responsibilities by passing this resolution. We think that the time has now come when we should endeavour, by every loyal, legitimate, and constitutional means, to initiate a vigorous policy to resist the passing of this Bill. We ask you, one and all, to act together in strenuous opposition. I think it is unnecessary here to point out to you, if any additional incentive were needed, which I do not think, the thousands of English women who have raised up their voices in protest and have appealed to their Queen for protection. (Hear, hear.) It is necessary, therefore, that we should all act together, and I appeal to each of you, and through you to every European in India, to use his best endeavours both here and in England to defeat this most obnoxious measure. (Applause.) No sacrifice should prevent this; no personal sacrifice, save that of loyalty and allegiance, will be too great to be expended upon such a cause. "Because right is right, to follow right were wisdom in the scorn of consequence." (Loud applause and cheers.) Mr. Miller resumed his seat amidst great cheering.

Mr. HENRY BELL then rose to second the resolution and spoke as follows: Mr. President and Gentlemen,—I have been asked to second this resolution, but after the speeches that have just been delivered, I really find that I have nothing to say. It would be trespassing on your patience if I were to attempt to occupy your time. I believe that this is the first public meeting that has been held by this Association, and I think that it is an augury of the future usefulness of the Association that we here recognise the fact that our interests are not distinct and separated from those of our native fellow-subjects, but that they are intimately bound up with the community at large. The President told us that we had been accused of a want of sympathy with the native community. I for one distinctly deny this. I feel that in supporting this resolution I am not merely attempting to defend the rights of European subjects from unprovoked attacks; but I am also attempting to defend the native community from similar attacks. The President has told us that we are living under a despotic Government, but up to the present time this despotic Government has always been a Government which has been amenable to public opinion. The great change which it has been the honour of Lord Ripon to inaugurate is that he has established a despotism which is superior to, and acts in defiance of, public opinion. That is, as far as I can see, the great distinction between Lord Ripon and his illustrious predecessors. (Great applause.) Now, our resolution professes that in our opposition to this Bill we are not only defending our own rights, but those of our native fellow subjects; and there can be no question on that point. If we are deprived of our privileges to-day, the Zemindars will be deprived of their property to-morrow. We are to be deprived of our privileges because they are anomalies; the Zemindars are to be deprived of their property because a century before Lord Cornwallis declared that they were the proprietors and not the ryots. (Applause.) Therefore, to redress this anomaly, Lord Ripon is now proposing to strip them of their property. It seems therefore to me, sir, that we have common grounds with the Zemindars in resisting this style of legislation which has been this year introduced, that is legislating against particular classes of the community with respect to their feelings. Now, I think, we shall be very little removed from slaves if we are to live under a Government, and yet are to have no voice in framing the laws we live under. (Applause.) I cannot consider that the small knot of officials who circle round the Simla Sun represent the accumulated wisdom of the country. (Loud applause.) Well, gentlemen, I have made many more remarks than I had intended to make. I have only one more to make. There is no doubt that Lord Ripon is at present in a somewhat embarrassing position. (Shouts of laughter.) He feels that he has committed an error; but he thinks that it is very much better to persevere in his error than to acknowledge his mistake. The President has reminded us that Lord Ripon made his speech in Council a distinct promise that he would abide by the result of official opinion. Public or non-official opinion is, as you know, distinctly against him, and official opinion is also against the measure. The question now is—what course, under these circumstances, is he prepared to adopt. It seems to me, sir, that he has only two courses open to him—one is to withdraw his Bill, the other to persevere in his error. The one is an honest policy; the other a dishonest and tortuous one. (Continued applause.) Do not imagine for a moment that in making these remarks I wish to say anything personal against Lord Ripon. I believe that he is actuated by the purest intentions and the most benevolent disposition. (Laughter.) But we know from experience that the greatest misfortunes that have befallen countries have been brought about by honest and conscientious, but obstinate rulers. (Loud laughter.) I feel that I am only giving utterance to the opinion of this meeting when I express a hope that he will put an end to this agitation which prevails throughout the land, and adopt a course which will give that confidence to the country which his late legislative measures have done very much to shake. (Loud applause.)

Mr. J. G. APCAR said: Gentlemen, I address you at the request of your President, and I shall add only a few words to those that have been spoken. It is a matter for reflection of a painful character that there should be occasion, so long after this controversy first commenced, for the resolution that is before you. It is the more painful when we remember that so late as 1881, on the bare expression of their objection to the provisions of a Bill by the Mohammedan and Hindu communities, Hindus and Mohammedans were excepted from the operation of those provisions when they became law. (Cheers.) No one grudges them what they have gained. All that we ask is that the Government should listen to the objections we make. (Cheers.) It is not as if we had no merit on our side. The Pioneer has described the ground on which the Ilbert Bill was founded as a hypothetical grievance—(cheers)—and we have learned to regard that newspaper as the Government organ. The London Times has stigmatised the principle which it was urged by a partisan in favour of the Bill, it embodied as clap-trap. (Cheers.) And we know how careful the Times is not to exaggerate the feelings of the educated people in England. Each point the supporters of the Bill raise we lay low, only to find that the advocates of the Government have shifted their ground, and when we test the fresh ground, we prove it to be as unsound as any they had previously taken up. If all this gradually has generated a feeling of exasperation it is only the natural outcome and the certain consequence of such conduct. Do not misunderstand me. It is my deliberate intention to avoid saying a word that can be represented as an attack on Government. In this respect I do not blame the Government. They have stated their reasons plainly and clearly enough, and we hold them to those reasons. They have told us that their purpose is to remove an anomaly. Through very shame and fear of ridicule they will never again allege such a ground as the reason for legislation in India. They have told us that they wish to remove race distinctions. The Bill not only does not remove race distinctions, but it emphasises them. They have represented the object of the measure to be to secure the effectual and impartial administration of justice. As justice is being effectually and impartially administered, it has cost us no effort to dispose of this point. There remains one ground more. It is administrative inconvenience. It is significant that this finds no place in the official document which states the objects and reasons for the Bill. I do not say that it was designedly unfair, but I do say that the tactics pursued, which developed this point in the last speech delivered in Council, operated to the disadvantage of the opposition, because they had no opportunity of effectually dealing with the question. However, administrative inconvenience is the point on which the whole question now hinges, and we look with confidence to the result of the reference to the Local Governments. (Cheers.) The agitation in this country is real and earnest enough, but attempts have been made to disparage and minimise it. It has been stated that it is due to the High Court judges, and that they have been moved to rouse this agitation because they have taken offence on account of the reduction of the salary of a High Court judge. This allegation is most absurd. That the judges are opposed to the reduction of the salaries is true, but they are opposed to it in common with the Viceroy and his Council. The reduction affects only three judges out of the whole number, and they expect that their salary will be equalised with that of the other judges, and it is ridiculous to think that they should be so grievously wanting in tact as deliberately to set the Government against them. (Hear, hear.) Then we are told that the planters are opposed to it, because they fear that the immunity they enjoy under the present law will be destroyed. Gentlemen it is false that they enjoy any immunity. The law is effectually and impartially administered, and even if the proposed Bill be passed I should think no authority would venture to send a native magistrate into a planting district. It is a wicked and base calumny to speak of the planter as a brutal man. (Loud cheers.) He is a humane and honorable person and a fit representative in the districts of the nation to which he belongs. (Loud cheers.) He possesses the elements in his character which have made that nation great. (Cheers.) The planter is the natural ally of Government, and the true friend of the native. (Cheers.) The presence of the non-official is an element of strength in the Mofussil. It is the non-official in the mofussil to whom the native comes in his distress for advice and assistance. (Cheers.) Many natives in these districts will endorse what I say. It is a very short-sighted policy that the native pursues in alienating the non-official, in grudging him the enjoyment of that which he holds very dear. (Hear, hear.) We also are told that the Covenanted Service and the Indian Bar are opposing the Bill through jealousy. I must say that it is most unfair and most unjust that the civilians whose opinions have been solicited by Government should be condemned, because they happen to be opposed to the preconceived notions of one who knows nothing of the matter on which he is ready to pass an opinion. (Cheers.) We know that the officials have studiously avoided joining in the agitation. Why, it is to the Covenanted Service that the native owes everything. It is the members of that service who struggle to raise and improve the position of the native. And what reason has that service—among whom, by the way, there are natives—to feel jealousy? They would not be deprived of any emolument, nor would a native be in any better position in his service, if this Bill were passed. (Hear, hear.) Every judicial post in the service is open to the native, whether he has power to try Europeans or not. (Hear, hear.) And as for the Indian Bar, among whose numbers, by the way, there is a still greater proportion of natives, what cause for jealousy have they? It is preposterous that such an allegation should be made. When we point out to the supporters of the Bill that every man with experience of the country is opposed to the measure, we are told that it is due to prejudice. The terms are scarcely synonymous, but, even if it be prejudice that influences the opposition, it is better to be governed on the basis of prejudice than that of ignorance. (Hear, hear.) Another system for depreciating the opposition is, that the present one is of a similar character with previous agitations. One of those cited is that in respect of the famous "Black Act," and what was it that that Act affected? European British subjects had the privilege of an appeal to the Supreme Court, the judge of which held office under the Crown, and that Act took away that right, and transferred the appeals to the Sudder Court, the officers of which were the servants of the Executive Government. The resolution condemning it was seconded by a native, Dwarkanath Tagore—(loud cheers)—and he urged that the policy of Government should be to raise the native to the standard of the European and not to level him down to the native—(cheers)—and native and Europeans through the districts joined in the petition against that measure. In what is the resemblance? I would describe that agitation as one by non-officials against officials. Here we have the question of race distinctions raised. Again, a case that has now become celebrated has been referred to, in which a European planter of Jessore with some native fellow-prisoners was convicted by the magistrate. The European, unfortunately for himself, had the right of appeal to the High Court. The appeal came before Mr. Justice Phear and Mr. Justice Morris. The judges disagreed, and the case was retried before a third judge, the then Chief Justice, Sir Richard Couch. And in the result the two barrister judges differed from the civilian judge and convicted him. It was the universal opinion of the bar that the conviction had been against the weight of evidence. The native prisoners had an appeal to the district judge, and in the result they were acquitted. We had the judgment of two civilian judges, judges experienced in dealing with native witnesses in Mofussil cases against that of two barrister judges with no such experience. I was one of those who joined in the petition for the release of the planter, a petition which native and European joined (cheers) and the grounds of that petition were not only that the conviction was against the weight of evidence, but that further facts had come to light after the trial, which convinced the public that the planter was innocent. There was no question of class feeling, nor was there any cry of the kind now being raised. (Hear, hear.) It is also asserted that the definition, European British subject, is an invention made by the Act of 1872. But the definition is founded on old English statutes, and is included in the circular orders of Government on the opinion of the then Advocate General, given in the year 1859. It is also said that the Bill should be passed because it affects the welfare of the natives. In what manner does it affect the welfare of the natives, whether the European is tried by a European or by a native? It is very easy to say that it does so, but it would be more convincing if the reason for such an opinion were given. (Hear, hear.) I would rather say that it would affect it to his prejudice if it were passed. (Hear, hear.) We are told that it is now the duty of the English people to redress the wrongs of their forefathers. What wrong have your forefathers done to the Bengali? What was his position when your fathers conquered this country, and what is his position now? And what would his position be if you were to leave the country? Gentlemen, repudiate the notion that opposition to this measure is incompatible with goodwill and friendly feeling towards the native. (Cheers.) You are willing that they should enjoy their privileges and rights, and all you desire is to be left in the enjoyment of your rights and privileges. There have been some arguments based on the question of the settled policy of Government, and the Statute of William IV. has been much relied on, to show that that Statute altogether swept away all distinctions of race and creed in the conferring of employment on the native. But those who quote it, do not also state that that Statute applied only to employment by the East India Company, and the power to try European British subjects could be conferred only by the Crown, and was conferred through the Supreme Court. For me to go into this question would only weary you, gentlemen, and I will only say if such was the law, how was it that those who made the law never acted on it? The whole question raised on the Statute and on the law on this subject can be met, but this is not the time nor the place for me to deal with the matter. I have also heard it stated that the exemption is unconstitutional as being opposed to the Queen's proclamation. If it be in truth so, has it taken twenty-five years to find it out, and on what authority is this wild assertion made? If Lord Canning and Lord Lawrence in truth were of the opinion the supporters of the Bill would have us believe they held, how is it that they never attempted to do that which Lord Ripon is attempting to do? Gentlemen, I shall not detain you any longer. I have addressed you because I have been requested to do so, and I hope that my words may, perhaps, serve a useful purpose. (Cheers.)

The resolution was then put and carried unanimously, and amid great cheering.

A vote of thanks to the chair was then carried, after which the proceedings came to a close.

THE MEETING OF THE DEFENCE ASSOCIATION.

THE speeches made at the meeting of the European and Anglo-Indian Association show very plainly that the opposition to the Native Jurisdiction Bill is just as keen as ever, and that the agitation against that measure is likely to be stimulated rather than weakened by the recent activity of Baboo Lal Mohun Ghose's friends in England. When Mr. Bright, at the meeting which took place on the 1st of August at Willis's Rooms in the presence of Lal Mohun Ghose and several Indian officials and others, described Mr. Ilbert's Criminal Procedure Bill as an act of justice, in fulfilment of the promises made in the Queen's proclamation, and attributed the opposition to the Bill to jealousy on the part of Covenanted Servants and the Indian Bar, he merely echoed a weak and very ungenerous argument advanced by Lord Ripon himself in the course of the debate which took place in the Supreme Legislative Council on the 9th March last. In that debate the Viceroy, though promising to weigh the powerful objections to which he had just listened, went so far as to say—"The truth is, that the opposition to this Bill is in reality not so much an opposition to this particular measure, as an opposition to the declared policy of Parliament about the admission of natives to the Covenanted Civil Service." When we describe this statement as most ungenerous, we feel that the remark could be truthfully described in far less moderate language. What is particularly to be deprecated in this line of argument is the suggestion that European Covenanted Servants had been prompted by unworthy feelings of jealousy to oppose the admission of native civilians to equal privileges with themselves. We are entitled to feel confident that Lord Ripon will lose no time to repudiate the suggestion which Mr. Bright has so eagerly adopted. For his lordship must know, as the general public already knows, that the Government of India could not have plumed itself on "an overwhelming consensus of official opinion" when leave to introduce this "small measure" was first sought, if a preponderating majority of European covenanted servants had not at the outset shown their desire for the removal—within practical limits—of any distinction which the Government of India might be satisfied was invidious, or which might be construed into a slur upon their native brethren. But the Right Hon John Bright, as the champion of "all the legislative measures" of the Marquis of Ripon, has obviously seized upon this statement of his protegee as a reliable guide to keep his feet from the pitfalls into which he habitually falls when approaching problems of Indian administration, and with customary arrogance "attributes the clamour raised against the Bill to jealousy on the part of Covenanted Servants and the Indian Bar." We need not dwell upon the grave injustice to a distinguished service which Lord Ripon has no doubt unwittingly caused. The Covenanted Servants of the Crown in India have not yet been admitted to share with the Bengalee Babu the privilege of being universally regarded with animadversion and contempt, and as long as they are permitted to remain in this anomalous position they will probably survive the splenetic diatribes of imaginative oratory.

Notwithstanding the historical attempt to put forward an overwhelming consensus of official opinion in support of the Ilbert Bill when leave for its introduction was sought (with what now appears to have been an almost farcical respect for the independence of the Legislative Council), it is more than doubtful whether there has been any real change of official opinion with respect to the policy of the Government of India. As far as we are able to gather from the published papers, the majority of the replies then received, to the confidential circular, tended in the direction of approval of a measure which would enable natives who had entered the service by competition in England to be invested with the proposed jurisdiction on attaining the position of district magistrate or sessions judge. This was an object then considered practically attainable by most of the Governments and Administrations, and by many of the subordinate officers then consulted. Those replies must be taken as disposing once for all of the jealousy theory, a theory more discreditable to those who adopt it than to any one else. Moreover, the Governments which favoured such a restricted measure incurred no responsibility as to the choice of the occasion for its introduction. The head of the Government in India had early in 1882 shown himself to be fully and carefully advised as to the political dangers of re-opening the question, and the Government of India was alone responsible for the unfortunate decision that the existing occasion was an opportune one for disturbing the settlement of 1872. The "small measure" which the Supreme Government in its wisdom hastened to bring forward was very different in scope and intention from the one for which the benevolent invitation of the Simla authorities had obtained a qualified approval from the local Governments. We must acquit the Government of any wilful desire to manipulate the manufacture of public opinion; but if report speaks true, the steps taken at the time the suggestive confidential circular was sent forth last year were not such as might ordinarily be expected to elicit an unbiased opinion whether the powerful arguments advanced in the debate which preceded the settlement of 1872 against any further concession, have still any application. What wonder, then, if the eyes of officials were afterwards opened to the dangers of the principle involved when the published Bill and the debate of March 9 last in the Legislative Council, drew attention—as attention was bound to be drawn in course of time—to the real grounds upon which the law was to all intents finally settled by the Legislature only ten years previously. If Mr. Bright's desire to become acquainted with the true grounds of the opposition to the Bill has been half as real as his wish to impute sinister motives, he would have found quite enough in the published debate of the 9th March last to show that the opposition was general and sincere. But, if every other reason were wanting, there is one which to every impartial mind must appear sufficient to explain the strenuous resistance of every European opponent to this unstatesmanlike measure. We mean the disastrous consequences of subjecting English women to the proposed jurisdiction. As the London memorial presented to the Secretary of State puts it:—"The position of the female sex in the social system of India has not been appreciably affected by that contact with Western ideas which has done so much for India in other respects. That social system is still founded upon polygamy and on the strict seclusion of women. Publicity of any kind is, in the case of any respectable native female, an utterly infamous thing; and it seems obvious that native magistrates, brought up under such a social system, and living in it, rigorously secluding their own wives and daughters whose faces may not be looked on, either in court or elsewhere, by the eye of any male relation, are certainly not qualified (however high may be their moral character or intellectual abilities) to sit in judgment on Englishwomen charged with criminal offences. Your memorialists believe it to be absolutely impossible for native magistrates so nurtured, so educated, and so circumstanced, adequately to appreciate the motives, or weigh the words and actions of Englishwomen." Now, what do those opponents who, out of five hundred other reasons, select the above as a sufficient and unanswerable objection, find to meet that objection? Only this, that in the cantonments, where European soldiers are congregated, where, therefore, the objection to the proposed jurisdiction will find powerful advocates, whose warning voices must make themselves heard, but where, on the other hand, the men will be well protected from any judicial vagaries, the Government have given an implied assurance that the principle of the Bill shall not be applied. As Mr. Keswick pointed out at the meeting before referred to, the Queen's proclamation notwithstanding, the office of Cantonment Magistrate is, we are told, not one to which natives can be impartially admitted! But defenceless English women scattered over the remotest parts of the country are to be recommended to the Legislature as fitting subjects upon whom the new courts can try their prentice hands. Fiat experimentum in corpore vili. It is not necessary to say anything more to expose the hollowness of this sentimental impartiality. It must be clear how despicable is the attempt to attribute to an unworthy motive of covetous jealousy the anxiety of Europeans to guard the liberty and honour of their countrywomen in a land where a false accusation is an ordinary form of petulant revenge, and reckless perjury is one of the cheapest marketable commodities.

The weakness of the argument based upon the impartiality promised in the Queen's proclamation can only be surprising to those who have not taken the trouble to examine the position of the advocates of this pseudo-sentimental measure. The argument was emphasised by Lord Ripon, who seems to have become persuaded that it is a strong point. It has, of course, been echoed and applauded by the Native Press, and it is only natural that it should, in due course of time, be taken up in England, with the approval of a Bengalee Baboo, by a public speaker who has not as yet shown any special aptitude for dealing with Indian affairs. From the persistency with which the argument is reiterated one would expect to find something in it. Yet, twist the proclamation how one will, there is nothing in it which can by any force of ingenuity be quoted as a reason for arbitrarily abrogating an existing privilege of any class of Her Majesty's subjects in India. The Queen's proclamation in 1858 announced her will, that as far as may be "our subjects of whatever race or creed be impartially admitted to offices in our service, the duties of which they may be qualified by their education, ability, and integrity duly to discharge." Now those who fall back upon this proclamation as an argument for the Ilbert Bill have not yet told us why the course of departmental promotion cannot proceed in accordance with the above assurance without appealing to the Legislature to alter the law. If anyone object to native civilians being promoted to the office of district magistrate or sessions judge when seniority and qualifications entitle them to such promotion, then let the proclamation be cited by all means. But why should the law of the land be altered so as to suit the entirely problematical intention of a political manifesto? To most minds it would appear that the executive in this country is bound by the law, and that the proclamations of the Queen are made with a due regard to the supremacy of the law. Her Majesty's proclamation is just as strong a reason for passing a law to enable natives selected to fill the office of juror to form a jury for trying Europeans, as it is for passing a law to enable natives appointed to fill the office of judge or magistrate to try persons who under the existing law possess the privilege of being tried by Europeans. The confusion of ideas which permits the proclamation to be cited as an argument in support of this Bill, is due, as we pointed out when Mr. Ilbert moved for leave to introduce the Bill, and has been frequently pointed out since, to the inability to distinguish between a jurisdictional power of the judge and the privilege of the accused. In the words of the London memorial "the privilege as to jurisdiction is the privilege of the prisoner, not the privilege of the judge." To quote again from the same memorial—the question which is really at issue is not whether a certain jurisdiction ought to be conferred upon certain public functionaries; but whether the requirements of the administration of justice demand that a certain class of persons should be deprived of a privilege which they have long enjoyed and which they greatly value." Mr. Keswick referred to this view of the question when he said:—"We are accused of want of sympathy with our native fellow-subjects most unjustly. We do not desire to take away any of their rights, but only to defend our own." Whatever be the issue of the struggle to which the owners of a valued privilege are now unhappily committed, there can be no doubt about this one fact, namely, that the attempt to minimise the opposition to this disastrous measure by ascribing it to Covenanted civilians and lawyers is obviously futile, as the European community will not allow the virtue or credit of opposing this embryo legislative blunder to be monopolised by any particular official or professional class.—Times of India.

THE POSITION OF THE INDIAN GOVERNMENT ON THE ILBERT BILL.

In our article of Thursday we explained the reasons which render it impossible for the opponents of the Criminal Jurisdiction Bill to accept such a compromise as that advocated by the Statesman.

Let us now see what is the position of the Government itself in the matter. If we turn to the speech with which Lord Ripon closed the debate on the 9th March, we shall find that it is barred, by the ground then taken up by it, from proposing such a compromise. Whether from a conviction of the inherent weakness of the sentimental arguments in favour of the Bill, or from a sense of the impolicy of allowing such arguments to override the unanimous opposition of the community whom it would affect, His Excellency then rested the case for the Bill entirely on its supposed necessity in the interests of administrative convenience. The question to be decided was thus very properly narrowed to the single issue whether administrative convenience demanded the Bill or not. To that question the replies of the official experts consulted have furnished a decisive answer, and it is perfectly well known what that answer is: If it is in the negative the whole question falls to the ground. For it is preposterous to suppose that any such measure as that embodied in the suggested compromise can be demanded by administrative convenience. As far as such convenience is concerned it is practically immaterial whether a body of men who actually represent only two or three per cent. of the entire body of full-power magistrates, possess the power of trying European British subjects or not. For in every district of importance there are at least two such Magistrates, and no rule of administrative convenience can possibly require that both of them should be natives.

If, then, finding the official verdict against the assumption of "administrative inconvenience," the Government should now fall back upon such exploded ideas as that of the necessity of removing an anomaly merely because it is an anomaly, or wiping out a purely imaginary stigma, it will prove in the most convincing way that the late reference to the opinions of its officers was an elaborate farce. It will do more than this: it will expose itself to the imputation of having deliberately misstated the character of the issue on which it intended to decide the matter.

Its position will be that of a surgeon who, wishing to amputate the limb of a patient on the ground of its being the seat of malignant disease, is led by his protestations to call a consultation of fellow experts, and who, on finding that they one and all pronounce the limb sound, nevertheless insists on amputating it, in order to prove the correctness of his original diagnosis, or to gratify the crowd of students whom the prospect of an operation has drawn together.—Englishman.

A NATIVE CAVALRY OFFICER ON THE ILBERT BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "PIONEER."

SIR,—Inasmuch as I have for some time past been reading in Urdu Akhbar's accounts of the Ilbert Bill, and the agitation it has caused among the natives of Bengal, who desire that the government of this country should pass into their hands, I beg to offer a few remarks thereon. In my opinion, these are simply signs of the gross ignorance of those who are agitating on such a matter there by spreading discontent and animosity between the different races throughout the land. From the experience I have gained after a service of twenty-six years under Government, I am well aware of the great difference that exists in the administration of justice by European and Native Magistrates and, if required, I can mention cases in support of my statement; where the ends of justice have not been attained when administered by Natives; but in all cases, whether civil or military, strict impartiality has been shown, and justice duly meted out, when the presiding officers have been Europeans. History affords no proof of the government of a conquered country being vested in any other than the paramount power; and I can safely assert that with the exception of the obese and feeble Bengalees, who would be found utterly incapable of defending their country, should an emergency arise, no other race of India would hail the passing of a measure which, instead of improving or ameliorating the present condition of Her Majesty's Indian subjects, would simply entail disasters and misfortunes unheard of and unprecedented on this unhappy land; and that if Government is desirous of completely mining this country, it cannot do so better or sooner than by passing this obnoxious Bill. My object, therefore, in addressing you is that no heed at all should be paid to these clamorous Babus; that this Bill, already a source of discord and ill feeling, be consigned to the flames; and that the Government of the country be carried on on the same principles as heretofore.

MAHOMED NOOR KHAN (Pensioner).
Late Ressaldar, 7th Bengal Cavalry.

MEMORIAL OF THE BENGAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AGAINST MR. ILBERT'S BILL.

To His Excellency the Most Honourable the Marquis of Ripon, P.C., K.G., G.C.B., G.M.S.I., Governor General of India in Council.

The humble memorial of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

SHEWETH,—That your memorialists have considered the provisions of the Bill to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, and they beg respectfully to submit to your Excellency in Council their deliberate and well-considered views respecting this measure.

Your memorialists venture to think that their views may be worthy of attention, because they, and those with whom they are connected, are brought into direct and intimate relations with the natives of this country. Those views are based upon long and wide experience. Your memorialists hope, moreover, that the fact that they do not apprehend any personal application of the proposed measure in their own case, and that many of them may probably retire from the country before the fruits of the proposed change mature, will strengthen rather than weaken the force of their opinion. That opinion may not coincide with the sentimental and theoretical views of persons devoid of experience as to the actual circumstances of the country, or of those who ignore differences of race, creed, education, and habits; but your memorialists trust that their sentiments deserve to be treated as something far removed from blind panic, unreasoning clamour, or factious opposition. It commonly happens, indeed, that Englishmen come to this country imbued with benevolent or sentimental theories, most or which are based on the assumption that political equality between the European and native races is possible and desirable; but such equality your memorialists consider an illusion—an illusion which has, indeed, a semblance of generosity, but which very slight experience suffices to strip of its specious attractions and altogether to dispel. Those who have not penetrated beneath the plausible surface which the Oriental usually presents to European eyes may continue to cherish such an illusion; but it is impossible for those to do so who, like your memorialists are brought into daily contact with the various classes of the people in the ordinary transactions of life.

Your memorialists, as a body of mercantile men, are deeply interested in all that may effect the development of the resources of this country. They recognise that their interests, as representing European capital in this country, are bound up with the security and prosperity of the country; and are therefore identical with the true interests of their native fellow-subjects. Your memorialists feel sure that it is not necessary to press upon the attention of your Excellency in Council the disastrous effects of insecurity, or even a feeling of insecurity, upon trade and commerce. It is superfluous to insist upon so obvious a fact of experience as the sensitiveness of capital. A sense of insecurity, especially a sense of personal insecurity arising from want of confidence in the administration of criminal justice, cannot fail to paralyse capital and to arrest its flow into the country, while it will unjustly impose serious sacrifices on those who have already invested their capital in reliance upon the existing state of security.

Your memorialists regret that their experience compels them to condemn, emphatically, the present Bill, and to view with distrust the policy which appears to underlie it.

Your memorialists trust that it is not too late to express such an opinion. They submit that the admission of natives into the Civil Service does not in the slightest degree preclude objection to the policy of the present measure. The public could scarcely be expected to foresee the present development of that policy; since the Government itself did not contemplate such a result, even down to the framing of the present Criminal Procedure Code. Nor did the large mass of opinion and reports submitted when that Code was in preparation indicate such a result as desirable, much less as inevitable; for although nearly two hundred opinions were then laid before your Excellency in Council, only one faintly foreshadowed any such measure. The Government admitted natives into the Civil Service subject to the restrictions at present existing. Had the Government then contemplated perfect equality of powers, it would doubtless have considered itself bound in fairness to make known its views at that time. Had any such development been foreseen, it would undoubtedly have called forth the same objection as is now urged against the present measure; which measure, it is now said, is a necessary consequence of the step then taken.

Your memorialists further venture to submit that neither the present measure, nor the policy upon which it appears to be based, are necessary or legitimate developments of the spirit of Her Majesty's Proclamation of 1858. If that Proclamation involved such changes as the present Bill contemplates, further advance in the same direction would be inevitable; so that the finality claimed for this measure could not exist. Her Majesty's Proclamation however, does not profess to prescribe or define the course of future legislation, which is by law placed under the control of your Excellency in Council.

Nor does Her Majesty's Proclamation declare, or even contemplate, that any larger share in the government or administration of the country than was then enjoyed by the native races should be conceded to them; or that those races should attain greater power or influence. It declares that, "so far as may be," all Her Majesty's subjects, "of whatever race or creed," shall be freely and impartially admitted "to offices, the duties of which they may be qualified by their education, ability, and integrity duly to discharge." This declaration is not confined to any class of Her Majesty's subjects, and leaves their employment to be determined, subject to the existing law, by their fitness and other circumstances of the case.

The proclamation initiated no new policy.

The view above submitted is that adopted by successive Governments, including Government which framed and issued the proclamation. Their action shows that they did not consider themselves bound to accord to the native races any greater share of the administration than the circumstances of the time rendered fitting. To attribute to them a different view would be to charge them with deliberate disregard, of the settled policy of the country; since natives were not, until recently, even eligible for the civil service.

Moreover, your memorialists venture to submit that it would not have been competent to Her Most Gracious Majesty by proclamation to prescribe the course of future legislation—a consideration which appears conclusive as to the true scope of the proclamation in question.

Your memorialists, therefore, deem themselves at liberty to consider this proposed measure on its merits, both as regards its policy and its detailed provisions.

The policy of the Bill is set forth in the "objects and reasons," and has received further elucidation and development by your Excellency in Council.

All parties agree in considering that policy to be the policy of forthwith conceding a larger share in the administration to the native races. The conclusion that this is the policy of the Bill is forced upon your memorialists. The same conclusion is eagerly adopted by the natives.

Your Excellency's speech in council appears to confirm this view; since your Excellency based the defence of the Bill, as your memorialists understand, upon the Queen's proclamation, which your Excellency appeared to consider a declaration of the principle of complete equality between the Englishman and the native. The statement of objects and reasons of the Bill is to the same effect, for it states that "it was thought anomalous that, while natives of India were admitted to the Civil Service, and held competent to discharge the highest judicial duties, they should be deemed incompetent to be justices of the peace and to exercise jurisdiction over European British subjects outside the Presidency towns;" it speaks of "removing the present bar upon the investment of native magistrates in the interior with powers over European British subjects;" and then proceeds to say—"The Government of India has accordingly decided to settle the question of jurisdiction over European British subjects in such a way as to remove from the code, at once and completely, every judicial disqualification which is based merely on race distinctions."

Your memorialists can discover no anomaly in the existing system beyond the natural anomaly that races differ; with the result that the subject race is unfit to govern the dominant race.

The Bill ignores this difference, and, assuming equality for the purposes contemplated, proceeds to bestow upon certain classes of natives a further share in the administration of justice, irrespective of race, and as a matter of right. The policy might have been more plainly stated; but it is impossible to escape the conclusion at which all parties have arrived as to its character.

This policy rests upon the assumption that a native who has attained certain position is, in all respects, as well qualified as an Englishman to perform all duties which an Englishman of similar position may be set to perform. To proceed to apply this theory—a theory requiring a bold disregard of fact and experience—to so delicate a matter as the administration of criminal justice between the two races is surely unwarranted, much less required, by the Queen's proclamation. That proclamation expressly provides for actual fitness in the person employed, of whatever race he may be; and significantly points to education and integrity as elements in the qualification. Your memorialists submit that no reasonable person can possibly ignore the difference of character arising from difference of race, or venture to assume that, even with like education and similar surroundings, such difference could be eradicated.

But here the original difference of character is heightened by difference of education, influences, habits, creed, and aims. It appears to your memorialists that the policy in question rests upon a confusion of ideas with regard to the proclamation—namely, that the absence of disability implies fitness.

This policy your memorialists view with the utmost anxiety, and they regard the necessity of discussing it as a public misfortune. They cannot admit the assumption upon which it rests; or allow that a few years in England can possibly qualify natives of this country to take the same share in the administration of the country as Englishmen. But the Bill does not content itself that class alone, or chiefly; but includes within its purview those educated in this country, surrounded by every influence which tends to widen the gulf of race distinction.

Your Memorialists are fully sensible of the wisdom of laying the foundations of Government deep in the welfare of the governed; and they are always ready, when consulted, to approve any well-considered measures tending to the real benefit of the natives; but your memorialists are convinced that it is cruel to them, and mischievous to the State, to affect to countenance such illusions as the policy of the present Bill seems calculated to encourage. Such illusions, if persisted in, are, in their opinion, calculated to cause grave and serious disaster throughout India, and that too at a not very remote period of time.

This Bill, when originally brought forward, was rested solely on the ground that it would remove an anomaly. There was no suggestion of administrative difficulty; nor has any such difficulty been suggested as might not be surmounted without public detriment. It has, indeed, been stated that, inasmuch as one-sixth of the civil service may consist of natives, there must ultimately be administrative difficulty; but it is obviously impossible at present to foresee whether it may not be quite easy to overcome that difficulty should it ever occur. It is, at any rate, sufficiently clear that no serious difficulty has at present arisen, or can at present arise. The suggested difficulty is, therefore purely speculative.

On the other hand, the immediate mischief actually resulting from even the introduction of this Bill, is, unfortunately, no longer a matter of speculation. Bitter race feelings have been evoked by what is felt, and your memorialists think rightly felt, to be an unnecessary, ill-judged and ill-considered attack on a justly cherished right. A wise statesmanship would, they venture to think, shrink from evoking such feelings, and would certainly not encounter such mischiefs in pursuit of any merely speculative good. But the harm does not stop there:—the proposed tribunals will necessarily invite distrust, instead of commanding that public confidence which is essential to the due administration of justice. Here, surely, is an administrative difficulty of sufficient magnitude to disturb all who value the efficient administration of justice. The mischief, moreover, does not stop even here; for out of the evils indicated, mischievous results will arise, at present incalculable distrust engendered, paralysis to enterprise and discouragement of the naturally loyal; these are but some of the baneful results which may be reasonably apprehended. Such fears, it is said, have been often entertained and as often falsified. It is true that English feeling as to matters affecting the relations between the two races is highly sensitive. This, however, seems to your memorialists the reverse of a reason for disregarding it; seeing that such sensitiveness arises from a perception of the danger involved in any disturbance of the relations at present existing. Your memorialists regret that they cannot admit that such fears have been unfounded in time past, for they feel that the position of Englishmen in India has been lowered, and consequently the foundations of British security perceptibly affected by every similar measure in the past.

Your memorialists, judging from past experience, cannot help feeling that like effects will accrue from the present measure, and it must tend to deprive Englishmen settled in this country, comparatively few and often widely scattered, of that position which is universally felt to be essential not only to their welfare and to the safety of themselves and their families, but also to the very existence of British rule. It is to such settlers that the real acquisition of India as an integral portion of the Empire may be traced and justly credited. It is the beneficent flow of peaceful commerce which has turned the desolation of conquest into fruitful prosperity. And to what end is society to be thus moved to its depths?

Your memorialists respectfully submit that the susceptibilities of the entire British community deserve to be, in the eyes of a British Government, as worthy of consideration as the susceptibilities of a few native officials. There can be no pretence of any injustice to be remedied, for these gentlemen entered the service upon the footing of the existing law, and, indeed, could not have obtained admission on the footing now claimed for them without exciting the same feelings as have now been aroused. The proposed measure seems to your memorialists to be in every way unjust and impolitic, uncalled for by administrative necessity, calculated to evoke feelings of race antagonism which prudent statesmanship would allow to slumber, tending to create distrust of the policy of Government, and to destroy confidence in the administration of the criminal law.

Your memorialists do not desire to dwell unnecessarily upon the details of the proposed measure. They venture, however, to call attention to a singular inconsistency in the utterances in Council respecting one provision of the Bill. The supposition that a native would never be appointed a cantonment magistrate was welcomed as obviating what could not be denied to be a danger—the danger, namely, of allowing British soldiers to be tried by native magistrates. But surely, it is part of the anomaly sought to be removed that a native should not be so appointed; and it is strange to set about removing one anomaly in reliance upon the existence of another. The satisfaction, however, created by the existence of that anomaly is rudely shaken when it is remembered that a cantonment magistrate may become subordinate to a native collector, who, as his superior magisterial officer, is, in the exercise of his discretion, entitled to assume jurisdiction in criminal cases ordinarily triable by a cantonment magistrate.

In conclusion, your memorialists feel confident that your Excellency in Council, solicitous for the welfare and prosperity of all classes of Her Majesty's subjects, will accept the results of practical experience, and will give such weight as may be due to the views herein submitted. If, as your memorialists trust, those views recommend themselves as just—if the opinion of your memorialists is, as they venture to hope, entitled to weight, as representing the feeling of the European mercantile community—if your Excellency in Council is satisfied that in passing this measure you will be disregarding the feeling of the mercantile and European community, even should that feeling fail to meet with sympathy from your Excellency in Council—then your memorialists cannot doubt that your Excellency in Council will not, shrink, in the interests of good government, from withdrawing the present Bill without further delay—a result for which your memorialists humbly pray.

On behalf of the memorialists,

ROBERT MILLER, President, Bengal Chamber of Commerce
H. W. I. WOOD, Secretary, Bengal Chamber of Commerce

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1883.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Aug. 28; Madras and Allahabad, Aug. 27; Calcutta, Aug. 26.

THE Anglo-Indian community in England has grown so accustomed to its Monday's telegram from Calcutta in the Times that the non-appearance of that interesting record this week will be felt by most of them as a personal loss. Our friend, "the loungee at 14, St. James's," has been publicly stating his belief that it has been burked by the same telegraphic demon who turned the famous "Reuter" topsy-turvy to oblige Lord Ripon.

THE controversy about the said famous telegram has been conducted by the Radical Press in the way which we are unfortunately becoming accustomed to expect. Just as Lord Kimberley, at the time of the Anglo-Indian deputation, assigned opinions to Sir Alexander J. Arbuthnot, which were diametrically opposed to everything Sir Alexander had said, so as to be able easily to answer them, in like manner the Radical Press is indignant with the Times and other papers, that had drawn public attention to the very suspicious circumstances of the falsification of the numbers in Reuter's telegram, on the entirely fictitious ground that the said papers had said, or implied, that Lord Ripon had himself personally fudged the numbers.

No one, so far as we know, ever said or implied anything so idiotic. Probably the nearest approach to such an amazingly foolish transaction, that is recorded in history, was the astounding intrigue unearthed in March last, all the circumstances of which are now known and admitted. Bearing this important fact in mind, the St. James's Gazette is quite justified in saying:—

"Meanwhile, and on the strength of this most manifest equivocation, we are asked by the admirers of Lord Ripon's Government whether it is not a shameful thing to suspect any of its members of attempting to delude the public at home by false statements. The answer to that question is, Certainly not. Nothing can be more natural; nothing in its way can be more completely justified. Is it not true that, on official authority, this same Reuter's Agency was employed, and paid, to send to England a garbled account of a certain debate in Council on this same Ilbert Bill? And if it is true, is it not rather ridiculous to affect indignation at the suspicion that what was done once has been done again?"

BUT the Radical Press represents its opponents as charging Lord Ripon with attempting a burlesque on Guy Fawkes—with going down to the telegraph office with a garbled telegram and a dark lantern, and bribing Reuter's agent to send it off to the Press of England.

ALL that was said by those who looked with suspicion on the admitted connection between Lord Ripon's Government and Reuter's Agency on the occasion of the earlier telegram, was simply this:—No one will deny the obvious fact that there has been fudging somewhere; that fudging has been greatly to the benefit of Lord Ripon's policy (N.B., many Radical provincial papers have not, up to the present moment, contained any correction of the original telegram); former fudging has been exposed, and is admitted to have been the work of the Government in the fullest sense; and the combination of these facts—all of which are patent and undeniable—clearly renders it necessary for Lord Ripon's Government to explain. That explanation we have yet to receive.

THE Daily News and the Pall Mall Gazette are very jubilant over a telegram received by the latter journal from some unknown correspondent in India, in which it is stated that the Government have sent nothing through Reuter, and know nothing of what has been sent. The Pall Mall answers for its correspondent as a trustworthy authority; so we can have no hesitation in accepting its statement as that of a person possibly connected with the Government, who himself personally believes in the truth of what he is telegraphing. But now, it will not be forgotten that, on the former occasion, if a similar inquiry to the one telegraphed out by the Pall Mall Gazette had been addressed to any member of the Government—except the Viceroy himself, Major Baring, and one or two others of the "inner circle"—he would unhesitatingly have asserted (in perfect good faith, and entirely believing his information to be sure) exactly what the Pall Mall's anonymous correspondent asserts. For the other members of the Government knew nothing about the transmission of the telegram through Reuter; and as they unquestionably ought to have known of such a transaction, they would doubtless have felt perfectly justified in categorically denying that such a transaction had ever taken place. And yet, it did take place. So, as we have already observed, the public will still await an explanation of this peculiar business from the Government of India itself, not from an anonymous correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette.

Now, mark the use made by the Radical Press of this anonymous telegram in the Pall Mall. This is what the Western Morning News, in its London correspondence, says of it:—"A telegram has been received from the Indian Government denying point blank that they sent anything through Reuter or knew what Reuter had sent. Still, I suppose, the charge will be reiterated." And the Nottingham Daily Express, not to be outdone, says:—"The Pall Mall Gazette determined to clear the matter, telegraphed straight to the Indian Government at Simla, and received a flat denial of the whole charge, in time to publish it in their issue on Tuesday afternoon."

"STRAIGHT to the Indian Government!" Prodigious

WE sincerely hope that the discussion about the origin of the astounding series of blunders, that began with an "error of transmission" of twenty-six for 205, and that was continued by "editing" (that is now the word for it) 319 into 140, so as to make the figures prove—we sincerely hope this somewhat unsavoury discussion will not have the effect of distracting people's attention from the grand point that (as the Western Morning News very frankly put it) Lord Ripon's individual views on this great question are now unequivocally condemned by the whole European opinion of India.

A VALUABLE point is brought out, in regard to another defect, hitherto unnoticed, in the utterly mischievous Bengal Tenancy Bill, in a letter to the Indian Mirror, which we publish elsewhere. The surveys and measurements that will be rendered necessary by this Act, if passed as it stands, will grind down the unhappy ryots throughout the country, under a frightful weight of extortion and oppression. Mr. Ilbert virtually acknowledges, in Section 42 of the Objects and Reasons, that the Act will, in all probability, improve the ryot off the face of the earth, by transforming him into an "under-ryot" (called a cooly or day-labourer by everybody except the gifted draughtsman); so perhaps he thinks a little extortion, more or less, won't matter much.

NOR the least ridiculous of the many mistakes made by ignorant English writers in treating this land-question in Bengal, is that which looks at all zeminders or landholders as rich men. Of course, all rich men are zeminders—the ultimate possession of land is the almost universal goal, to which the money-making classes look forward; but the vast majority of zeminders are exceedingly poor men. Neither Lord Ripon nor Mr. Ilbert can be actually ignorant of this fact, for it is set forth with wearisome iteration in every set of statistical tables on this question that has ever come before them.

Yet the Tenancy Bill seems to be drawn in absolute disregard of the fact.

ALL those of our readers who take an interest in the higher education of India, and in the future of the English-educated classes, will read with considerable interest an article on the forthcoming report of the Education Commission—evidently written or inspired by some one who knows what that report is to be—which appears in to-day's Standard. It hints that the Commissioners have accepted all Dr. Leitner's extreme views about primary education, that the State aid will be almost confined to that branch of the State's educational duty, and that the Colleges will be left to "local effort and support." Of course, we have the old bunkum repeated, about a "return" to the principles of the Despatch of 1854. "The fears of the Baboos" are ridiculed; and the Colleges are called "educational serais," where the "Anglicised Natives" are said to "pick up only bad manners, contempt for their elders, and a smattering of English." This is what the inspired writer says:—

"The public funds were to go to elementary teaching. For more liberal instruction the plan of grants in aid was to be adopted. The object to be kept in view was to draw out local effort and support; and, according to the plain meaning of the Despatch, no College was to be maintained which did not, within a reasonable time, become self-supporting. The result has, unfortunately, not accorded with the ideal. The tendency has been to lavish grants on the Higher Education and starve the village schools. Colleges and High Schools, which ought to have been the care of local effort, have become the charge of an ambitious Educational Department. The controversy, unfortunately, became complicated by sectional issues. Missionaries, who have been pioneers and indefatigable labourers in the work, complained with good reason that their schools, depending as they did on voluntary contributions, supplemented in but a slight degree by Government grants in aid, could not compete successfully with the State schools established by their side. Finding their energies thus crippled, they naturally felt with greater warmth the injustice done to the poor by the diversions of the public grants for the benefit of the well-to-do. On the other hand, the class which for want of a better name is called that of educated natives, looked with alarm on the withdrawal of subventions from the institutions to which they owed their own advantage, and from which they hoped to reap like benefits for their sons. How far a wholesale and immediate denial of State support to the superior institutions is contemplated by the scheme of the Commission, we cannot with any definiteness judge. As 'the extension of private enterprise and self-help, with a view to the higher education,' is mentioned as one feature in the recommendations, we might conclude that the principle laid down by Lord Halifax is at last to be enforced. But the assurance given elsewhere, that existing rights are to be carefully maintained, appears intended to soothe the fears of the Baboos. The suggestion that School Boards shall be constituted throughout the country is, at any rate, in keeping with the general design of creating (we refrain advisedly from saying 'developing') institutions of local self-government.

"Dr. Leitner's charge against our administration, at any rate in the Punjab, is that, finding this splendid educational groundwork laid, we deliberately declined to build on it. The real leaders of native society have been alienated by our contempt for their studies and ideas. They decline to send their sons to educational serais, where they pick up only bad manners, contempt for their elders, and a smattering of English. Our protégés are, therefore, drawn perforce from the class too poor-spirited to care for anything that is not commercially useful. Thus English and Urdu have thrust aside the vernacular and the elegant Persian. But, not content with reminding us of our blunders, Dr. Leitner advances a specific charge of breach of trust. We levied from the people a cess, which we called a village school cess; but instead of spending it on the village schools, we devoted it to the creation of English and Urdu-teaching academies. We have destroyed, in fact, two-thirds of the indigenous machinery, and have not put any adequate apparatus of our own in its place. Something must be allowed for the extravagance of a specialist, but the report of the Education Commission shows that Dr. Leitner is right in contending that a wrong exists which cries for redress."

We fear the Standard is too trustworthy a paper to allow us thus to suppose that it actually knows what "the report of the Education Commission shows," unless it really does know. All we can say is, if the Standard's account of that report is a true one, Mr. Hunter's Commission will have destroyed the future of High Education in India.

We fear the truth will be found to be much what we have more than once sadly predicted in these columns. Sir Frederick Roberts approves of the Ilbert Bill, and draws from that Bill the conclusion that no more Natives should be admitted to the Covenanted Civil Service. So with Lord Ripon's policy; it flatters the vanity of some of the more short-sighted of our English-educated Native fellow-subjects, at the expense of the feelings of their Anglo-Indian friends and well-wishers; but it takes care to provide, in the way now demi-officially foreshadowed by the Standard, that the supply of the class of "Anglicised Natives"—as the demi-official writer calls them—shall be effectually cut off. What will Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose and his allies say to this line of policy? They have been beguiled, by empty promises, into an attitude of hostility—we will not say ingratitude, because the hostility has been due to a misapprehension—towards their best friends. We venture to say they will now very soon discover how serious is the error they have committed.

THE Pioneer says:—

"In our issue of July 26 reference was made to the case of one Sayid Muhammed, a fanatical Mahomedan preacher arrested on a charge of tampering with the troopers of the 6th Bengal Cavalry at Segowlie. It will be remembered that the Calcutta High Court quashed the commitment, on the technical ground that the previous consent of the Government to the prosecution had not been obtained; but the Court added a rider to their judgment, to the effect that doubtless the omission would be supplied, and the prosecution be carried out with more regard to the requirements of the law. This was nearly two months ago, but no further action has been taken. We now learn, on the authority of the local Magistrate, that Sayid Muhammed is still at large, but we are unable to say whether he is again preaching sedition among our Native soldiers. There has been a great miscarriage of justice; but is it too late to remedy the original mistake of procedure in the Magistrate's Court? The military authorities are bound to take action in the matter; for if Sayid Muhammed escapes punishment, fanatical missionaries will be found preaching sedition in every cantonment in the country."

THE Englishman gives a rather amusing account of the antecedents of the more prominent members of the select little coterie gathered round Mr. Foggo, to defend Lord Ripon's policy:—

"Our readers will find in the English papers full accounts of the meeting held at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, London, on July 23, in support of the Indian Government policy. It had been announced that Sir Arthur Hobhouse would take the chair, but it having been intimated to him that this would not be becoming to him as a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the chair was taken by Sir John B. Phear, who will be best remembered in the precincts of the High Court of Calcutta under the soubriquet of 'Babur Phear.' The ex-Indian officials who attended the meeting appear to have been represented by Mr. Robert Cust, and Mr. Haggard, of the Bengal Civil Service. Mr. Cust was an able, but eccentric and rather impracticable officer in the North West and Punjab service. Mr. Haggard will perhaps be remembered as a late joint magistrate at S-rampur, where he earned the soubriquet of 'Damn legality,' and carried on a weary official strife with the representatives of Young Bengal, until his health compelled him to retire from the Government Service."

MR. C. C. MACRAE's many friends in Calcutta, to say nothing of the Bengal Bar Library, will be surprised, remarks the Indian Daily News, "to find his name among those present at the meeting which was presided over by Sir John B. Phear, held at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on the 23rd July, in support of Lord Ripon's Indian policy."

THE Statesman is informed that the report circulated regarding the reversion of Mr. J. Lambert to the Deputy Commissionership of Police, Calcutta, on the return to India of Colonel Henderson, Superintendent of Thuggee and Dacoity, is incorrect. Mr. Lambert does not return to Calcutta, but will be employed by the Political Department in the Rajputana States.

THIS is a specimen of the amiable style of writing in which the Calcutta Native journal Reis and Rayet indulges:—"There is some talk of the Maharajah of Cooch Behar being made an Honorary Major of the 6th Bengal Cavalry. We have had enough of honorary nonsense and deceiving with children's toys, and have long been expecting something worthy of men. We have already honorary generals, but hardly a real subaltern. It is time enough for a number of our youths to be made cornets and ensigns, or junior lieutenants."

A TELEGRAM to the Englishman, dated Silchar, August 16, runs as follows:—

"At a meeting of volunteers called to-day the attendance was spare, and a general feeling of dissatisfaction prevailed. It was eventually agreed, after Mr. Aitchison had made a few remarks regarding the dilatory conduct of the Government about the Ilbert Bill, to appoint committees in the different districts to take the views of the volunteers. Mr. Aitchison, in his remarks, regretted the step he was obliged to take, but stated his intention of withdrawing from the movement, and knew the feeling of many more was the same, if Government persisted in the Bill. This, he stated, was not a menace, but merely a withdrawal of any assistance he could lend, on the grounds that Government not only declined to assist us, but wished to deprive us of our birthright."

THE St. Stephen's Review says:—

"An officer's wife writes to me by this mail from Murree: 'This country is in a very unsatisfactory state. Whatever you can write against the Ilbert Bill will not be too strong. Of course at first it would only affect a few; but it is the thin end of the wedge, and general opinion is that natives throughout India are becoming most insolent. In days gone by an Englishwoman was perfectly safe anywhere; but it is very different now, as can be seen by the repeated assaults on ladies in Calcutta. At Jhelum there was a bad case the other day, and we hear people say it is scarcely safe to live alone. I believe very little of the real feeling is known at home. Did you see that a Mahomedan had been discovered at Segowlie, preaching disaffection to the troopers of the cavalry? In yesterday's Civil and Military Gazette they state that seditious letters are being circulated in the Punjab; some were seized a few days since at Umritzur.' The writer of the above writes truly, 'I believe very little of the real feeling is known at home;' but even if the mischief that this Bill has already caused, and will continue to cause, was known more fully in England, the Home Government would deliberately put cotton-wool in their ears, rather than listen to the truth. It is this terrible indifference to ultimate consequences which is drifting us on to what?—Another mutiny, those say who know the country and the natives."

WITH respect to the Indigo Market, we take the following from Messrs. J. Thomas and Co.'s Price Current:—

"We have but little to report from Lower Bengal, as manufacture is drawing to a close at many factories, and without any improvement in crop prospects. The weather in Midnapore has been unfavourable; in Jessore results are miserable; and so far as we are able to judge, the total outturn from Lower Bengal will be about fifteen thousand maunds. Manufacture from first cuttings in Behar is drawing to a close, and although we are still without full returns, appearances point to an outturn from Moorhun of about 40,000 maunds. We regret having to report the prevalence of severe floods in Behar, and several factories have, we are afraid, lost the bulk of their Khoonties. The inundation seems to have been most severe in the neighbourhood of Mozufferpore, and just now Khoontie prospects are anything but encouraging. Our Benares advices continue satisfactory, and we are glad to report that good and general rain has fallen all over the North West, and though it is somewhat late, crop prospects have been much improved."

THE Tea Market is thus reported upon by Messrs. J. Thomas and Co.:—

"The usual weekly sales have been held at which 25,593 chests were offered, and of these 24,363 chests found buyers, viz., 9,563 packages on the 16th, and 14,800 chests on the 23rd instant. The earlier sales passed off at steady rates, except for common qualities of Broken Teas and Souchongs which sold at easier prices. The large auctions of the 23rd were assisted by better news of the market in London, and prices (except for low broken descriptions) show a decided improvement, more particularly for the better classes."

THE Englishman gives the following with respect to the Freight Market:—

"Since last week the demand for steam tonnage has subsided, and slightly lower rates have been accepted by loading steamers. No fresh fixtures have taken place. For sailing tonnage there has been a fair inquiry, resulting in the fixing of three ships for London, one for Liverpool, one for the Continent, and three for Mauritius. Rates have advanced slightly since last week. Our unfixed tonnage has been reduced to 42,000 tons."

THE same paper gives the following obituary of the week:—Shariff Khan, younger brother of the Ameer Shere Ali, at Bagdad; Seth Rughunath Das, of Muttra; Mr. Richard Charles Ross, Superintendent of Watchmen, Madras Railway; Mr. Edward Cordeaux, C.S., Acting Judge, Puna, and Agent for the Deccan Sirdars.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE following is the official summary of the reports of the Revenue and Agricultural Department on the state of the season and prospects of the crops throughout India for the week ending August 14:—

"The break in the monsoon, which is causing considerable anxiety, still continues in Northern, Central, and Western India. Between one and two inches of rain fell in the Madras Presidency, and although prospects there are generally fair, the dry crops in several districts stand urgently in need of more rain. In Mysore the weather has been favourable, and the crops are doing well. In the Bombay Presidency there has been little or no rain, and the crops are said to be withering in many districts. Even along the Western Coast the rainfall of the week has been very light. The river in Sind is still below its normal level for the season of the year, and partial injury to crops has taken place, but the river is reported to be rising again. The Berars, Central India, and Rajputana have been practically without rain, and in the two last-mentioned tracts much anxiety as to the crops is felt. Rain in varying and generally sufficient quantities has fallen in Bengal, Assam, and Burma, and prospects are, on the whole, good in those provinces. More rain is, however, required in parts of the Rajshahye and Bhagalpur divisions in Bengal and the Sylhet district of Assam. In Burma the rainfall, though a good deal below that of last year, has been favourable, and the crops are thriving. Beyond slight showers in four districts, no rain is reported from the Central Provinces, and a failure of the rice crop in the eastern districts is feared. Less injury has, as yet, been sustained by other crops; but rain is urgently wanted. The same remarks are applicable to the North Western Provinces and Oudh, though here the need for rain is even greater. The eastern districts are still doing well, but in the west prospects are unpromising. Light showers have fallen in a few districts of the Punjab, but without benefiting the south-eastern districts, where serious fears are entertained of a complete failure of the crops on unirrigated land if rain holds off for another week. There is little change to notice in the position of agricultural operations. Harvesting is in progress in the Madras Presidency, and late kharif sowings and transplanting are being completed in the Deccan where locusts are still reported. In Central India, Rajputana, North Western Provinces and Oudh, and Central Provinces the kharif crops are being weeded, and in the Punjab sowing is nearly finished. In Bengal early rice and jute are being harvested. Some damage has been done in Behar by excessive rain. In Burma ploughing and sowing are almost over, and transplanting of rice is well advanced. Cholera continues severe in several districts of the Bombay Presidency and the Central Provinces, but is said to be abating in the latter. Cattle-disease is generally prevalent. Prices rule high."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following telegrams have been received through Reuter's Agency:—

SIMLA, SEPT. 12.—The Viceregal Council to-day passed the bill for the introduction of local self-government in the North Western Provinces.

SIMLA, SEPT. 12.—A large quantity of rifles and cartridges have been presented by the Indian Government to the Ameer of Afghanistan.

SIMLA, SEPT. 13.—In addition to limiting the jurisdiction under the Bill to District Magistrates and Sessions Judges, it is proposed to modify the Ilbert Bill so as to allow European cases to be transferred to the High Courts when their transfer is regarded as expedient, and likely to further the ends of justice.

SIMLA, SEPT. 16.—The Education Commission have completed their report, the final revision of which, however, is left to Dr. Hunter, President of the Commission, assisted by another of its members. The scheme provides for the extension of elementary education on a large scale; the incorporation of indigenous schools with the State system; the extension of private enterprise and self-help with the view to higher education. The report further recommends that school boards be constituted throughout the country, and that the cost of extending elementary education be further centralised. An educational Bill and Code are strongly recommended. Existing rights will be carefully maintained.

BOMBAY, SEPT. 18.—The Town Council of Bombay has refused to sanction the vote of 50,000 rupees granted by the municipality for defraying the expenses of the public reception of the Duke of Connaught, declaring 2,000 rupees to be the total sum that could be allowed for the purpose. Serious defalcations, amounting to 63,000 rupees, have been discovered in the cash balance of a Parsee cashier in the Bank of Bombay. Crop accounts are very favourable.

THE HAGUE, SEPT. 12.—The Budget of the Dutch East Indies for 1884 has been issued to-day. It estimates the receipts at 135,500,000 guilders, or 4,000,000 below 1883, and the expenditure at 149,000,000—thus showing a deficit of 13,500,000 guilders, or 3,000,000 more than the deficit for 1883. The coffee sales are estimated at 865,000 piculs at 30 centimes per half kilogramme. The Colonial Minister asks a credit of 5,000,000 guilders for the construction of a railway line between Sourabaya and Oedjong, the works for the improvement of the port of Batavia, and the addition of two vessels to the war marine of the colony. He recommends the maintenance of the system of coffee cultivation by the Government. This Minister also proposes to restrict the expenditure on public works, to extend the time for the completion of the railways already sanctioned, and to reduce the ordinary expenditure. A Government functionary will be sent to Brazil to study the system of coffee cultivation in that country. In conclusion, the Colonial Minister announces the introduction of proposals for establishing an equilibrium in the Dutch East Indian finances.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

MR. BERDMORE'S ESSAYS.*

A WORK of this kind does not often get much notice from reviewers. They have before them an ungracious task—they cannot dispute that the essay of which it is comprised have passed by the Candal Forks of two, if not of more, editors. In this case we believe it is two for the learned gentleman who holds the reins of the dear old Quarterly was present there throughout 1877 when Mr. Berdmore's articles appeared, and we fancy that the vigorous and intellectual doctor, with whose political opinions we so decidedly differ, was working away at the Westminster in 1864-7.

But were it half-a-dozen of Editors who had accepted these essays as written in the purest Saxon, and conveying fair notions on their respective subjects, still here they are in their own merits for criticism. An article has to be a very powerful one to be worth re-printing, and the public will probably very soon tell the publishers whether in this case they have made a mistake. This means that we are not by signs of approval or the reverse about to attempt to guide a public perfectly well able to select for itself its literary fodder—that we rather want to note here is the singular brain or temperament that has treated at such different periods the subjects so utterly diverse.

In 1864, evidently much affected by the death of an author of whom he appears to have had an extraordinary reverence, he places on record a monograph in which, whether correct or not, he pours his whole soul. He analyses the analyst; dealing with our English Balzac he puts a touch of Balzac into his criticism:—

"We remember that at the commencement of the 'Snob Papers' he was careful to tell us that he was the historian of snobs because he was one himself, and more than once in a confidential 'aside' to the public, he hinted that he was as bad as the man he sketched. He even said that he should like to walk down Pall Mall with two Dukes on his arms. This might be gentle laughing, but we incline to think there was a certain sincerity beneath it all, self-consciousness of the truthful man who had studied his own mental defects, and had no intention to claim—on the contrary, rather strove to disclaim—a self-immunity from the weaknesses that influenced others. 'Knew thyself,' said the old Greek, 'and perhaps those only best discover the cause of the pimples in human nature who have first marked their appearance on their own skin, and remembered the rich condiments of pride, selfishness, and luxury, which have induced them.'"

A most singular analysis we take this to be, but it is not an ill-natured one, for a few lines farther on the examiner of Thackeray's character breaks out with an indignant protest.

"If any think that we do him an injustice in recalling weaknesses which might be buried, we can only say that that man is, in our eyes, greater who digs in his own heart for less beautiful traits of human nature, and is not afraid to expose the weaknesses he himself has felt, than the writer who gives us away romances and fictitious sentiments sturring over the desolate hovels of habit and custom in which we live together with himself."

There were, no doubt, certain discrepancies in the subjective character of Thackeray which the writer has noted with some felicity, and, so far as we are aware, no one before or after him has pointed out that Thackeray personally was at one time Warrington, at another Arthur Pendennis. These different types existed not merely in the brain but in the man himself.

We do not, in reviewing a review, wish to be harsh, but why did not Mr. Berdmore stick to the text of the Westminster Review of 1864? We have compared it with the reprint and find some very considerable intigation of expressions which he then used.

Is it that he too repents youthful excess of language, and is more just as he becomes more Conservative in his views? For, that Mr. Berdmore had what were then advanced views, is dear by the nature of the organ in which he gave them expression. His article on Rupia is a most glaring case of an author reprinting matter and then calling out "Peccavi," p. 160. We do not blame him; we think it rather honest, but it is the most extreme point to which cynicism can go, and that is a quality on which, so we have heard, Mr. Berdmore rather prides himself.

We are not captious critics. It is very honourable for anyone to say "I have been wrong," and if we doubt about the condition of the author's head in 1864-7, we cannot dispute that he has a brave heart in 1883, for it is only a brave heart that says "I have sinned."

If this is a scratch team, it is a very quaint and singular one. Somehow or other there seems to be a skewbald in it. It wants harmony, and yet it has "go" in it. From Thackeray to Russia, from the stomach and the palate to a criticism on the coaches that start from the White Horse cellars, all are the same to Mr. Berdmore. He fears not to speak his mind on anything he touches, and this is the merit of the work. Nor if he may be, in his admission, of past errors, but with strong convictions he always writes. He pursues an idea to the last point—vide his curious comment on a coachman's driving-seat, p. 245.

Before we conclude, we will hark back to the article on Russia, because it is likely to cause renewed attention in view of the additional somewhat stringent remarks on Count Schouvaloff, Lord Derby, and others. In the preface Mr. Berdmore says:—

"I have made some additions, and but few corrections; but I am bound to say that inasmuch as the article in Russia touches on politics, there has been a great deal in the conduct of her Government, to say nothing of Nihilistic crimes, which prove to me that I took too optimistic a view of the nation, and that the 'earth hunger' of which other publicists have written was too much veiled from my eyes by the glamour of a hospitality which I shall always readily acknowledge.

Some observations due to the Franco-German war of 1870, are placed here instead of under "Russia," when she repudiated the Black Sea clause of the treaty that followed the Crimean war. Gambetta threw away one of those great chances which might have proved that he was indeed a statesman. The journey of Thiers to the north must have proved to him that France was to have no help from that quarter. To have sent her fleet round to the Black Sea would have proved that, even with Germany on her hands, France had still regard for treaties, and intended to have them respected, whether with the weak men at our helm then, as now, France would have forced our hand for very shame. I cannot say, but certainly she would have made us blush to accept so calmly the undone work for which, in common with her, we spent our blood; and even to blush is not so bad for a nation, when it permits its rulers to do ignoble, or fail to do noble acts. Bye-and-bye the working man will have his say as well as the bourgeois to think he will not allow his Government to turn the other cheek to the enemy,—perhaps, also, with a good deal more pride for his country than the Birmingham Radical, he will think that places like New Guinea had better be annexed.

We certainly do not disagree with these observations, but why were they not incorporated with the article? The author is, or should be, an artist in composition; then why relegate to a preface what should have formed part of his work? According to our view, a graver error could not have been committed.

Whatever may be the fortune of the work, no one will dispute that the style is peculiarly crisp and terse. Take, for instance, his history of the mail and other coaches from 1800 to 1850, pp. 226-240, every page of which smells of the road.

THE "ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE."

In the above magazine for September, Colonel Malleon continues his account of the Battlefields of Germany. He does not, however, confine himself to the mere field of battle, but gives a full account which enables the strategy of Gustavus Adolphus to be followed; thus the military deeds and movements of that great general are presented in a concise and very readable form, which has hardly been the case hitherto. In an article on "French Colonial Aggression," Mr. Holmes shows the dangers we may incur by allowing the French to outstrip us in naval strength, and it is only to be hoped that our Government will take the warning in time. Mr. Keene continues his interesting account of Indian districts during the Revolt, the Benares Division forming the subject matter in this number. Lieut. Sleeman, R.N., has an article on the "Employment of Naval Lieutenants as Paymasters," with which we can most fully agree, seeing no reason why combatant officers of the Navy should not be as fully employed in non-combatant services, as is the case in the Army, especially as so many active and useful officers in the Navy are necessarily retired from combatant service at an early age. Captain Clark Kennedy supplies a stirring "Song of the Rifle Brigade," full of true esprit de corps. In an article on "Red Men and White," which is especially interesting, Miss Gordon Cumming, so well known as a great traveller, gives inter alia a valuable account of the so-called Modou War. In these days, when we are so frequently accusing ourselves of tyrannous behaviour to inferior races, lust, greed, and so on, it is refreshing to be reminded that the Red Indians in Canada have been consistently honourably dealt with, and are loyal and fairly civilised. For an account of what is, and has been, the condition of the Indians in the States, we must refer the reader to the Magazine.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS AND THE KABUL CAMPAIGN.

ALTHOUGH General Roberts truly says that the time for a complete history of the campaign in Afghanistan has not yet come, we have very fair ground to go upon as far as the part he took, which was much the greatest in the campaign. Both Lieut. Low's "Life of Sir F. Roberts" and Dr. Duke's "Recollections of the Kabul campaign" give each in their way a most considerable addition to the information requisite. Lieut. Low's biography gives an excellent account of the distinguished part Sir Frederick Roberts took in the Mutiny, when only a lieutenant, yet fortunate enough to be on the staff, and to have a full view of the operations. The greatest luck that can befall an officer is to be able to see service early in life and if he be on the staff, where full opportunities are available of comprehending the situation of affairs in such a campaign as the Mutiny, he has the chance of thoroughly and practically learning war before his ideas get borned by the parade ground. This was the foundation of the good fortunes of Roberts, and of Wolseley also. Indeed, there have been few great commanders who were not initiated in war in early life. In the Umbeila and Abyssinian campaigns General Roberts took part, and held his first command in the Lushai expedition, but though these are described, the greater part of Lieutenant Low's book refers to the Kabul campaign. We do not recollect having read for a long time any account of a campaign which is so satisfactory for its clearness and its fulness of information, while avoiding the tedium of too much minute and unimportant detail. Dr. Duke's account of what he saw is naturally more of a personal narrative, pleasantly written, and illustrated with several landscape sketches, that bring prominently to mind the exceedingly difficult nature of the country and the positions that were attacked. As both these books have had the great advantage of having been submitted to Sir Frederick Roberts, the facts and conclusions may be taken as correct, with, of course, the reservation that Sir Frederick makes in his letter, which is published in the preface, to Dr. Duke's book. Thus, with these works in hand, a reader will be able to form a good and fairly accurate conception of the major and more important portion of the late Kabul campaign.

We should not neglect to mention that in General Roberts's biography his opinions concerning the retention or abandonment of Kandahar and the facts and arguments connected with his famous Mansion House speech are laid before us.

OUR TRUE ROUTE TO INDIA.

[FROM "BLACKWOOD."]

AMONG ancient writers there is perhaps no one [who so nearly approaches the modern spirit in many respects as does Herodotus, "the father of history." The shrewdness of his observations, the care with which he distinguishes between that which came within his own personal experience and that which he heard from others, may well be imitated by the modern geographical or historical writer; and the value of his own observations remains permanent, though the progress of monumental discovery and of rational criticism may lead us to relegate many of his historical statements to the category of mythical tradition.

When Herodotus visited Egypt, he was struck with the extraordinary amount of solid matter brought down by the current of the Nile. He was told, and was disposed to believe, that when Menes founded Memphis (that is to say, forty centuries before his time, and sixty-three centuries before our own), the Egyptian delta was non-existent, save in the form of marshes near the city of Thebes, and that Memphis was thus a seaport in a deep bay or gulf of the African shores of the Mediterranean. He hazards the suggestion that had the Nile flowed into the Red Sea, nothing could have prevented the river from filling up the Gulf of Suez. But the great traveller was not aware that this was actually what had occurred before his own days; nor did he know, as the geologist now knows, that the isthmus on which all eyes are now fixed is a late natural feature of the Mediterranean coast, and that the green bed of Wady Tumeilat is, in fact an ancient Nile Branch, closed up in the course of ages—as are the Tanitic, the Pelusiatic, and the Medesian mouths—by the tendency of the great river to choke with its own mud. The Pithom mouth, as Wady Tumeilat may be called, was already silted up in the days of Necho, who constructed the earliest sweet-water canal along the Wady in the seventh century B.C.—the time of Josiah, King of Judah. But at what period it was still flowing, and whether it was yet open when the Israelites marched out of Goshen, we have as yet no evidence to show. This only we do know, that since Egypt first existed, the Nile has yearly brought down the soil of Abyssinian highlands to fertilise and increase the delta, in that the Nile of Egypt is steadily growing northwards, at the rate of fifty yards per annum, since at least sixty-two million tons of silt matter are yearly carried down the river, so that the waters of the Mediterranean are turbid with mud to a distance of no less than ten leagues from the mouth. At Port Said, the oldest known antiquities are not earlier than the Christian era; and there can be little doubt that at the time of the Exodus, even if the Mediterranean and the Red Sea were not actually connected by lakes and marshes, the shore of the former at least reached to Kantarah—Lake Mentaleh and all the flats and marshes north of Taxis or Zoan having as yet no existence.

These facts, which are too often entirely forgotten, agree with what we know of the growth of all the river deltas of the Mediterranean. They agree also with the history of Tigris and Euphrates; and they belong not to the region of theory, but to that of a certain circumstances, founded on accurate professional observation.

When Sennacherib attacked Ean, the Persian Gulf reached to Kor-nah now a hundred miles from the mouth of Euphrates. Alexander founded Charax on the sea-shore, whereas it is now fifty miles inland. The Shatt el 'Arab, or "desert shore," which now stretches on either hand of the combined channel of Tigris and Euphrates, had then no existence. Babylon in fact, in 2000 B.C., was only half its present distance from the sea; and the rivers of Chaldaea have been growing longer at the rate of about two miles per century, which is an even more rapid rate of increase than that of the Nile.

But while these great changes have gradually and imperceptibly been carried out by nature, years by years, century by century, without the attention of mankind being especially attracted, another kind of change has gone on in Palestine in the case of the Jordan and the Dead Sea. The Jordan Valley is the most magnificent 'fault' in the world. It is a chasm formed by the tearing asunder of great beds of rock 4,000 feet thick; and this occurred, as there is plenty of evidence to show, at a geological period as late as, or even later than, the Eocene epoch. The sandstone cliffs which stand up east of the river, when their dip is contrasted with the sudden subsidence of the chalk and limestone slopes which run down from the western watershed to the valley, bear evidence of the occurrence of this wonderful crack in the earth's crust, which extends for 200 miles. In Eocene times there was a chain of great fresh-water lakes from Hermon almost to the Gulf of Akabah; and it has yet to be settled at what period the water-headed south of the Dead Sea was elevated so as to stop the outlet of these lakes, and to leave a broad dry channel (120 miles long), now called the 'Arabah, or desert, south of the Dead Sea. The process of subsidence and of evaporation went on steadily, long after the Eocene period, and is indeed thought to be still in progress; and the shores of lakes, now dry, have been traced in the Jordan Valley, and show clearly how the great sheets of water have gradually dwindled, as the valley sank lower and the evaporation gained in power, so that in our own times they are represented only by the Dead Sea (which is forty miles long and ten miles broad), the Sea of Galilee (twelve miles by eight miles), and the yet smaller Hulch, or waters of Merom. The snows of Hermon are annually poured into this valley; the great fountains at its foot, the streams of Arnon, Jabbok, Jarmuk, and many other tributaries—from Gilead, from Moab, or from the west—are yearly rushing into the Dead Sea; yet this great supply of water, representing the rainfall of a basin covering many thousands of square miles, is able only to raise the level of the Dead Sea in winter about fifteen feet, and the whole of this amount (fifteen feet over 400 square miles) is in summer disposed of by evaporation alone, leaving the Salt Sea even saltier than before, from the chlorides brought down from the salt springs higher up the valley, and from the salt marshes north of Jericho.

The makers of the Suez Canal have then, in feeble human fashion, sought to undo the work which the Nile has taken at least sixty centuries to perform. They have dug their little ditch through the mud-flats which were once beneath the sea, and their achievement is considered by their fellow-men to be, perhaps, the greatest engineering triumph of an age of scientific power. It is, perhaps, not unnatural that in their exultation they should conceive themselves capable of doing yet greater wonders,—of being able to move mountains, and to destroy the face of primeval nature, and to set at nought the restrictions which, in all former ages, she has placed on human powers of transport, and on the direction of the great lines of Asiatic commerce. Yet let us not forget how stupendous are the forces against which we strive. The Nile has no labourer to pay, no limits of time or of distance. It hurls annually sixty million tons of solid matter into the Mediterranean, and chokes the mouth of the Canal at Port Said every year with 721,000 cubic yards of silt. If it be so wonderful a deed to scoop out a channel 100 yards wide through soft river-mud between the lakes of the Isthmus of Suez, let us beware before we credit the power of modern engineers to destroy the solid rocks of the Syrian shores, or to restore the ocean to beds which it has long deserted.

The highest ground in the Isthmus of Suez is only fifty feet above sea-level. The soil excavated consists partly of sand and mud; partly of a soft friable limestone deposit—the sediment of the Nile mud, dried and semi-consolidated, but not converted into rock even of the softest kind. At Shaluf there is a short cutting through rock, but the extent is inconsiderable; while, as it is unnecessary to point out, the existence of Lakes Balah and Timsah, and of the Bitter Lakes—survivals of the ancient Yam Suph or "sea of weeds"—gave material assistance to the projectors of the Canal. From an engineering point of view, then, the execution of a canal which in cross-section has an area of 450 square yards, with an extreme width of 100 metres, cannot be said to have entailed great mastery over the natural features of the land. Yet it cost 16 millions sterling to make, without reckoning collateral expenses, which make a total of over 20 millions.

The difficulty which has arisen, in consequence of the construction which M. de Lesseps places on his "exclusive right" to the isthmus which he Nile has for so many centuries been patiently building up for his sole benefit, calls attention to other lines of communication between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea. Dark hints have been thrown out that the Government may see its way to turning M. de Lesseps's position, by means of a canal through Palestine; and the claims of the Euphrates Valley Railway, of the Turco-Indian line, of the Nile Canal proposed by Mr. Fowler, are all brought into prominence by the choking of the Isthmus route. We may glance at each of these in turn; but of all the various schemes which have been discussed during the last twenty years, there is none which so fills the mind of an engineer with astonishment at the proceedings of his fellow-countrymen, as does that of the Jordan Valley Canal, recently revived under distinguished patronage.

The scheme to which Government seems inclined to lend an ear—not probably with any intention really to embark on the enterprise, but rather with the view of obtaining a set-off for negotiation with M. de Lesseps—is not by any means a new idea. It was proposed twenty years ago, by a Frenchman, as a rival project to that of the Suez Canal, and it has been talked of ever since in Syria.

From the mouth of the Kishon it is proposed—following the course of that river—to gain access to the plain of Esdraelon, and crossing this eastwards, to reach the low watershed (about 200 feet above the Mediterranean) which divides the Esdraelon Plain from the broad valley of Jezreel, running down by Bethshean to Jordan.

By means of a canal along this line, some twenty five miles long, it is proposed to let into the Jordan Valley the waters of the Mediterranean, which, as the valley is much lower than the Mediterranean level, would, it is contended, lead to the flooding of the whole of this great gorge, as soon as the stream was induced to run through the canal piercing the watershed near Jezreel.

This is, however, but part—and that the easier and less important part—of the scheme. The communication is to be made complete by another canal on the south, which is to let in the waters of the Gulf of Akabah into the Jordan Valley at the south end of the Dead Sea, thus forming a natural water-way which will require neither maintenance, dredging, nor other incidental expenses, but which, once made, shall remain a monument of human power over nature to all eternity.

Truly it is a grand and fascinating project. Palestine becomes a long peninsula, divided from the eastern deserts by a great lake, over which the hot winds will blow with moderated ardour. The fertility of the land must increase marvellously; for has not M. de Lesseps made the wonderful discovery that the presence of salt water produces mists of a fertilising nature?—a fact which the Greek islands obstinately refuse to recognise.

Again, to many there is, without doubt, a religious element in the question which commends it strongly to their minds. "The waters shall be healed," "The miry places shall be given to salt," "The fishers shall stand from En-gei" (which will be 700 feet below the surface of the water) "to En-eglain" (perhaps near the sources of Jordan); nay, even Capernaum "will be cast down to hell," as the water will rise 600 feet above its ruins (Ezek. xlvii. 9-11; Matt. xi. 23). It is with no intention of disrespect to those who hold such views that these words are written; but it is certain that in England such anticipations will strongly influence a large portion of the very public which might be asked to support the scheme in question.

Let us for a moment, however, consider what it is that the projectors of the Jordan Valley Canal would accomplish if they succeeded. The sea being admitted would, it is supposed, gain the same level throughout. The Jordan Valley would be filled up to a depth of 1,300 feet at the Dead Sea, and on the north the line would run out near the Huleh Lake. Thus Jordan would become a river only ten miles instead of a hundred long. The Sea of Galilee, with all its sacred places—Tiberias (with its Jewish population), Capernaum, Bethsaida, Bethshean, Jericho, and many other important sites—would be sunk below the waters. The dolmen fields of Gilead and Moab would be swept away, and a sea of 150 miles long, and at least ten miles broad, would fill the valley—a lake covering 1,500 square miles of country, four times the size of the Dead Sea, or about as large as the Victoria Nyanza.

The promoters have obtained the opinion (with many cautious reservations, it must be allowed) of a member of the Institute of Civil Engineers in support of their views. From his letter it appears that the whole work is to be accomplished in three years. The canal is to be only fifty feet wide and ten feet deep, but the water rushing through it is to enlarge the channel to the width of 480 yards, with a depth of twenty feet, which is calculated to be the size necessary to fill the valley at the rate of a million cubic yards per minute. This action of the sea is to be induced by a fall of six feet to the mile in the original channel, and is to be effected by means of the "properly directed scour of an elementary channel," with "due provision for evaporation."

The engineer had perhaps before his mind's eye what we know of the action of the Mississippi when forming a new channel, although the cases are not strictly analogous; but what are we to think of those who propose to deal with the rush of a mass of water as great as that which falls over the Horse Shoe Fall ledges at Niagara in a minute, but which is here confined within the space of a quarter of a mile, or half the width? Where will the man be found who will "properly direct the scour" of such a terrible waterfall; and who is responsible for the design which shows us a canal with locks descending into the valley? Are the locks also to be a quarter of a mile wide? and if so, who will work the gates? Are the locks to control water flowing with twice the force of the Niagara current? And if so, how thick will their gates be, and how large their sluices? Surely it is a marvel in the present century that professional men should be found to write even with qualified approbation in support of such a scheme.

But let us suppose that this is an exaggerated estimate, and that the company will be content to go to work more soberly and slowly. They will perhaps be willing to wait twenty or fifty years, and admit the ocean by a gentler gradient. Here, unfortunately, they encounter another difficulty, namely, that connected with "due provision for evaporation." We know that the summer and winter difference of level in the Dead Sea is fifteen feet. This is the minimum effect of evaporation in the Jordan Valley. Evaporation goes on all through the year, and all along the course of the Jordan and of the tributary streams. And lest it should be thought that the effects of evaporation have been exaggerated, it will perhaps be well here to remark, that the Abana and Pharpar, as well as several rivers of Central Asia, are evaporated without ever reaching the sea, just as the Nile itself would also be, but for the floods of the Atbara. It would therefore be necessary, before the height of summer was reached, to fill the valley to a depth of more than fifteen feet, or all the water let in would be evaporated away, and in spite of the two canals the valley would remain as dry as it now is. To float vessels, at least fifteen feet more should be provided, and thus our 1,500 square miles (and more) must be filled up some thirty feet high in the first year.

To this there are two objections. If only fifteen feet of water was to be admitted, the current must be fifteen miles an hour. If some advance on total evaporation is to be established, the current must be from twenty to thirty miles per hour in a canal about the size of the Suez Canal. The smaller the canal, of course the more rapid the current required. But twenty miles an hour is the ordinary rate of a railway train. Who is to control a current of this speed, which, as is well known, would tear up solid masonry? And what locks or sluices would be strong enough to regulate the flow? Ships would be carried helplessly along; and if ever they got down the slope to the incipient lake, they could never get out again, but must remain there until the sea attained its final level. Yet we have seen that under a rate of flow of fifteen miles an hour (roughly calculated) no effect at all would be produced; whereas, on the other hand, with a current running like an express train the lake would only be filled in the course of a hundred years. The company must wait for its traffic returns, then, at least a century, and by that time, perhaps, the reasons which give prominence for the moment to the question of an alternative route might have disappeared.

Let us look at the project from another point of view—namely, that of expense. The Suez Canal, we know, cost more than £160,000 per mile, and of this £87,000 per mile was expended on works of construction. The calculated prices for the Panama Canal show us a difference in expense between cutting a canal through rock or through earth which is as 6s. to 1s. 6d., or four times the expense in the case of rock. The Suez Canal is cut through ground nowhere exceeding fifty feet in height above the sea, and joins together a string of lakes.

Now, as regards the northern adit to the Jordan Valley, we have very exact information given by the Exploration Map of Palestine. The levels along the Kishon are marked, and are controlled to a certain degree by comparison with a line of levels run from the Bay of Acre to the Sea of Tiberias, which are exact within a few inches. It appears, then, that in the first ten miles there is a rise of about ninety feet, and in the next fifteen from ninety to about 200 feet above the Mediterranean. With a canal twenty feet deep and falling six feet in the mile, we should thus have a mean depth of cutting off about 200 feet throughout, or four times the maximum of the Suez Canal. As regards cross sections, we have seen that it would be impossible to make the canal small on account of evaporation, and that the promoters contemplate a final width to be four times that of M. de Lesseps's channel.

But would this excavation be through rock or through earth? The Esdraelon plain, no doubt, possesses a fine loose soil; but the depth is not known, and is not likely to be as great as 200 feet. The Carmel ridge is a hard crystalline limestone; the rocks below Nazareth are of the same formation; the hills of Gilboa are also of very hard rock; and a basalt district (of the very hardest material) must be encountered near the Jezreel watershed. It is thus probable that at least half the cutting would have to be blasted, and the idea of a scour enlarging the channel must be abandoned. A canal four times as wide and four times as deep as the Suez Canal must be cut through rock and earth, the cost of excavating which would be at least double that of excavation in the isthmus. Thus, for construction alone, the canal would cost thirty-two times as much per mile as the Suez Canal, or about 2½ millions per mile for a distance of twenty-five miles, without including the other charges, which in the case of the Suez Canal amount to £73,000 per mile and more.

We have taken the northern channel first, as being the part of the work concerning which the promoters are most confident. On the south they seem to assume that the country runs down-hill from the Gulf of Akabah to the Dead Sea, and that a canal on this side would be quite a short one. They speak also of "loose sandy soil" in this valley; and the "properly directed scour" is to do the work for them. As a fact, however, it is very well known that the 'Arabah rises northwards to a saddle near Petra, the height of which is not accurately ascertained, but the lowest estimate yet given makes it 200 feet above the Red Sea. Had no such rise existed, the Gulf of Akabah would probably have long ago done the work which is now expected of it. The attention of the company seems now directed to the examination of this watershed, and inasmuch as the greater includes the less, no doubt they will thus be most easily convinced; but in face of what is known as to the northern adit, it seems rather a waste of time and money to inquire into the details on the south. We know that the channel must here be at least sixty miles long, and probably on an average at least 200 feet deep. The cost per mile would be at least equal to that of the northern canal, the length more than double.

The soil of the 'Arabah is superficially a loose sand, but the saddle is known to consist of Nubian sandstone, which is a fairly hard rock. The intrusive traps which burst through this sandstone at Petra are yet more formidable, and the only choice is between these materials and the granites of the Sinaitic ranges. The estimate must in all probability, therefore, be higher than that for the excavation of the shorter channel.

Nor are these the only expenses. The Suez Canal was dug through a flat desert, the ground of which was really valueless, and the district uninhabited for the most part. This is not the case in the Jordan valley. A population of many thousands of nomadic Arabs, with flocks and herds, must be dispossessed and compensated. The corn fields which occur all along the valley must be bought; the villagers of Jericho and of Beisan must be recompensed for their vines and fruit trees. But yet more, what value is to be placed on Tiberias, with its 3,000 inhabitants, and (yet more unluckily) those inhabitants more than half Jews? What value will the Jews place on their houses and synagogues; on Tiberias, the Holy City, where the Talmud was first put in writing on the tombs of Meir and Kahna, and of the great Maimonides? Truly we have here to deal with men who do not under-estimate the worth of that which they have to sell. To buy a city might be considered rather a great undertaking, yet it is but a small contingency in this magnificent scheme. Tiberias is 680 feet below the Mediterranean, and either it must be overflowed, or it must be transported like an American town to some spot 700 feet farther up the hills.

Let us suppose that only a million is required to settle this matter, and that the rest of the valley is bought at the rate of 1s. per acre, giving a total for 1,500 square miles of £363,000 (which is far too low an estimate); we cannot suppose that compensation would be less than 1½ or 2 millions, yet this is a mere detail in the total placed before us. The bill to be met stands thus when stated in every respect at a minimum:—

|--------------------------------------|-----|-----|-----|--------------|
| Northern Canal—                      |     |     |     |              |
| Construction at 2½ millions per mile | ... | ... | ... | £65,000,000  |
| Other charges                        | ... | ... | ... | 1,825,000    |
| Southern Canal—                      |     |     |     |              |
| Construction at 2½ millions per mile | ... | ... | ... | 150,000,000  |
| Other charges                        | ... | ... | ... | 4,380,000    |
| Compensation                         | ... | ... | ... | 1,500,000    |
|                                      |     |     |     | £222,705,000 |

This is surely putting things at their lowest, yet the bill rather dwarfs the modest proposal to lend eight millions to M. de Lesseps. The expense would finally come to about twenty times that of the Suez channel; whereas M. de Lesseps now informs us that if left to himself he can make his second canal for five millions sterling—which those who know how the money was really spent in the case of the first canal will not be disposed to deny being possible.

What shall we think of engineers who are ready to conduct Niagara in the right path as though leading Leviathan by the bridle? Who will be able to change the whole face of nature, and to destroy thousands of miles of historic lands? We may perhaps be reminded of the Panama Canal, and of the proposed inland sea in Tunis. All that can be said in reply is this: the Panama Canal is not yet made, and many sober men are found to doubt whether it ever will be; but supposing it to be possible, it bears no resemblance to the proposal under consideration, and would be indeed a most modest achievement when compared with the Jordan Valley Lake. As regards the Shatut of Tunis, the French promoters have not yet shown good cause to convince us that the sea, which, in consequence of geological changes, has deserted the ancient bed, can again be induced to return at a rate sufficient to counteract the effects of evaporation. But even in this case the aims of M. de Lesseps are more modest than those of the Jordan Valley Canalists. Supposing that English capitalists prefer to spend 250 millions on this route (representing three times the amount of the annual national expenditure), rather than to aid in spending five millions on the new Suez Canal, there yet remains the difficulty of the introduction of the water, which, as we have seen above, is one which cannot be overcome.

Is it supposed by those who advocate this scheme, or by the Government which tacitly countenances its inception, that the idea will surprise M. de Lesseps. Why, the project is as old as his Suez concession, and he cannot fail to have then become acquainted with all that could be urged in its favour. Whether he be the great engineer whom some would represent him to be, or the great diplomatist which his history shows him to have always been, it is equally clear that the threat to turn his position by means of such a scheme will be received by him with a smile.

Leaving aside, then, this extravagant and thoroughly impractical suggestion, let us consider the remaining routes, first among which stands the Euphrates Valley Railway. The present Government were willing to lend M. de Lesseps eight millions at 3½ per cent. The Euphrates Valley Railway would cost, it is estimated, about ten millions, and it would pay at the rate of 10 per cent. over nearly half of its length. Perhaps, then, it might have been worthy of the attention of statesmen under the present circumstances, even though its construction had been a matter of consideration to a Conservative Cabinet under Lord Beaconsfield.

There are several modifications of this scheme which have lately been proposed, but they cannot be considered improvements on the old line laid down by Colonel Chesney in 1850. The route from Tripoli, concerning which Commander Cameron has written so confidently, cannot compete with that from Alexandretta and Aleppo, on account of the difficulties of the pass, 2,000 feet high, which it must cross to reach Homs, and which consists entirely of very hard black basalt. The Tripoli port is known to be the best on the Syrian shore, and a good military road might no doubt be made by the pass to Aleppo; but for a railroad, the line by Antioch is preferable in many respects. The scheme which Commander Cameron propounded at the Society of Arts, of a line from Tripoli to India, may be dismissed with as little ceremony as that with which it was then received from competent engineers.

It is more than doubtful whether any good line could be formed further south leading from Acre, although Haifa is probably destined finally to eclipse Beyrout as a seaport for Damascus. The further south we seek to penetrate inland, the greater is the extent of desert to be crossed before the Euphrates can be reached; and for this reason Colonel Chesney's route by Antioch and Aleppo to Birejik, and thence to the Persian Gulf, on the west or right bank of Euphrates, remains without a rival.

The advantages of the line are these. The route from London to Bombay would be 700 miles shorter than that by the Suez Canal. If the port of Kurachee were to replace Bombay,—which, in case of military use being made of this line, would probably be the result,—the route would be shortened by 1,000 miles, or by five days of sea passage. The length of the railway would be 920 miles, which represents forty-eight hours' travelling. Its cost is estimated at £8,000 to £10,000 per mile, or between seven and eight millions sterling. The saving of so much time would be a military advantage of the highest importance, and constitutes a claim which no other practical route possesses. The words of a famous diplomatist must not be forgotten, and the nearer Russia approaches to Herat and to Candahar, the greater becomes the necessity for the Euphrates Valley Railway.

As regards the commercial aspect, it must not be forgotten that in the days of the Seleucidæ, and yet later, in the Roman times, Antioch was the great rival of Alexandria, and the emporium of the commerce of Asia. In the 16th century, though Vasco de Gama had discovered the Cape route a century before, Queen Elizabeth had her fleet on the Euphrates, and had authorised the Levant Company to trade through Aleppo. It was in the 15th century that the Genoese trade in the Euxine declined, and was superseded by Venetian trade through the Red Sea; but these changes were mainly due to the conquests of Genghis Khan, and of his fiercer successor, Timur, and not to any physical causes. The invention of steam, followed by the cutting of the Suez Canal, has directed trade from the Euphrates to the Red Sea. It was not until the East India Company moved their factories from Bassorah that the trade of Aleppo was ruined. The establishment of a line of railroad by this natural route might in great measure restore the balance; and the local trade from Aleppo to the Mediterranean, and from Baghdad—by a short branch—to Bassorah, might yield a very handsome profit to the company, even if the rest of the line proved quite unremunerative. To seek, however, for traffic by diverting the railway eastwards to the Tigris Valley, would be fatal to the fundamental principles which alone recommend the Euphrates route, and would contradict the well-known fact, which has been proved especially with regard to this line of traffic, that local commerce follows, and is developed by, the through commerce of a great trade-route.

The advantages of the Euphrates Valley Railway are, however, balanced by very serious drawbacks. The number of small bridges required may be disregarded, as representing a very insignificant engineering difficulty; while the objections to moving troops by this route, which are based on the great heat of summer on the Mesopotamian plains, would surely not weigh with Englishmen when India was in danger, and five days or more were to be gained. It would not always be necessary to send soldiers in summer time, and, in ordinary circumstances, they might travel by night. The various contrivances used in India for cooling railway carriages might be employed, and, under any circumstances, it is only a question of forty-eight hours of heat—perhaps not greater than that experienced in the Red Sea. The drawbacks, then, are not engineering, nor are they climatic, but commercial and strategic. In the first place, some 500 miles of the route would be unproductive for a long time of paying local traffic. In the second, transport by rail, with the double transshipment at Alexandretta and at the Persian end, could not compete successfully with a through communication by water, as in the Suez Canal. For light goods, for the mails, above all, for the rapid despatch of troops, the railway would be of value, but not for the heavy merchandise which comes by sea from India.

The strategic objections are yet stronger, and they are akin to those which made Lord Palmerston oppose the Suez Canal. That Canal, as we now know, was created rather for a political than for any commercial reason. It was a menace to England—"a lance in the hand of France"—a hold on our communications with our Indian Empire. For this reason, as we well know, the scheme was received with favour by the diplomatists of France, even if the buying of shares was not regarded by our imaginative neighbours as a patriotic proceeding. It was for this reason that our great statesman opposed the scheme, not from any doubt of the engineering practicability, nor from any jealousy of French commerce and enterprise. It was the Suez Canal which gave France her influence in Egypt, and which has compelled England to occupy Cairo, and which still compels us to concentrate our attention on this corner of the Mediterranean. The interests of England are bound up with the development of this line of traffic, unrestricted by baseless pretensions to monopoly, and unhindered by the jealousy of those whose rights, whose traffic, and whose necessities less imperatively call them to keep safe and free the highroad of commerce to India.

The responsibilities which would be entailed on England by the construction of the Euphrates Valley Railway are of a similar description. Even if protected by the river, the line presents a long flank, exposed to a Russian advance from Armenia or from the Caucasus. A position at Aleppo, and a post in the Persian Gulf, would become necessary for the safeguarding of the railway, even if the occupation of Baghdad and of some part of Syria did not become finally imperative. The acquisition of Cyprus and of a tract near the Euphrates mouth, as also the acquisition of rights of navigation on the Karoon River, running from near the Euphrates mouth towards Teheran, had this meaning. They were steps which must precede the making of the Euphrates Valley Railway, and which might render it possible for England to fall on the flank of the Russian advance to India from Aterabad, on the south-east of the Caspian. Like the buying of the Suez Canal shares, they were acts which strengthened our hold on the road to India, and which tended to check the now rapid advance of Russia both eastwards and westwards. But they were great plans, which demanded the courage and forethought of a great man to ensure their success, and the patience of genius to develop. We have returned to the day of small things, to the reign of those who prefer to lend English money to her most jealous neighbour, and who seeing peace in their own days so far as Russia is concerned, are content to ignore all indications of her advance, and to place the good humour of France before the peril of Great Britain.

One more word let us add. The rights of the Sultan in Egypt are not likely to trouble the minds of those who have occupied this province; but to make a canal in Syria, or a railway in Mesopotamia a firman from the Sultan is necessary, if not also for a second Suez Canal. Have we any reason to expect that the Sultan is willing to grant such firmans to England under the rule of the present Ministry? British navigation of the Tigris has been forbidden; British exploration in Assyria or in Syria has been suspended; British subjects in Constantinople apply vainly for their rights to Sultan and Cabinet alike. Why should the Sultan grant new concessions to those who have declared for the "bag-and-baggage policy," who connived at the seizure of Tunis, and who invaded Egypt against his will? What proof is there to him that the Euphrates Valley Railway might not bring British troops to Baghdad, or the Jordan Canal hold a fleet which might declare Syria independent? It was not in this spirit that a more successful statesman approached the ruler of Islam.

Other schemes may be more briefly dismissed. The idea of a great railway which is to start from Constantinople, and push its way gradually, developing traffic as it advances, through Asia Minor and Persia, and by Biluchistan to India, is a scheme too vast to be of practical interest. It has all the military and commercial disadvantages of the Euphrates Valley line, and none of its recommendations. The length of line is such that it could not possibly be protected, while Russia from the Caspian would have a long start on her parallel route through Herat. The price of through transport by rail, over such distances, could never compete with that of even a longer line by sea; and this railway, in short, will not be made until Asia is civilised and Europe has disarmed.

The scheme of a canal up the Nile to Cairo or to Benha, and thence to Ismailieh, is condemned by similar considerations; it is a makeshift, not a natural route. The general who ruled a straight line between two points as marking the proper road to be taken, understood the principles not only of strategy but of commerce also. No man will go round two sides of the triangle so long as it is possible for him to go by the third. No ship will ascend a rapid river against the current, if a shorter canal without a current be available. M. de Lesseps has shown the true line by which the Red Sea may be reached, and he possesses the advantage of "interior lines" as compared with all his rivals. Such, then, is the position created by the unnecessary acknowledgment of a right which is more than doubtful—namely, which everyday seems to show us as more shadowy and unreal. Two Governments have dealt with the Suez Canal, since its construction was effected in spite of us, and—politically—to our detriment. The one statesman secured us a share in the company, and presented the country with a splendid financial investment. He kept his eye on the possibilities of the far future, and paved the way for the construction of a military line which might save five days at least on the road to India. The nation failed to follow him, and he was dismissed and died. His successor has taken up the question. He has made a bargain so bad that even the strength of his party will not enable him to carry it out; and in order to undo the evil done, in order to place some advantage against those which he has himself bestowed on his adversary, he proposes gravely to promote one of the most preposterous schemes concocted by any English committee of the age. The men who admitted the pouvoir exclusif and who condemn the Euphrates Valley Railway, are naturally those who will believe or feign to believe in the Jordan Valley Canal.

MAIL NEWS.

A telegram has been received in Bombay stating that the Duke and Duchess of Connaught have taken passage for Bombay by the mail steamer which will arrive at the end of November.

According to present arrangements H.E. the Viceroy will arrive in Calcutta on Dec. 1 and open the Exhibition of the 4th of that month. It is expected that the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, the Governors of Bombay and Madras, the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, and the heads of the other local Governments, and a large number of native princes will be present on the occasion.

Sir Evelyn Baring, the retiring Finance Minister, leaves Bombay for Egypt, to assume the position to which he has been appointed in that country. On Thursday, Aug. 23, a dinner was given at Simla in Sir Evelyn's honour, and he was subsequently invested by H.E. the Viceroy with the insignia of the K.C.S.I.

Active preparations are being made in Bombay to give the retiring Finance Minister a hearty reception. The East India Association have adopted a complimentary address, and another address was agreed to at a large and influential meeting of the inhabitants of Bombay yesterday evening.

The Press, both European and Native, acknowledge the great services which Sir Evelyn Baring has rendered to the country, and are unanimous in their expression of regret that India should be deprived of such an experienced financier.

A rumour was current at Peshawur on Wednesday to the effect that the Ameer of Afghanistan had been shot dead by his nephew, Nadir Khan, son of the late Ameer Azim Khan.

The report was not believed from the first, and it was subsequently proved incorrect. The rumour emanated from the Kyber, and is believed to have been founded on a plot for the assassination of the Ameer, who left Mama Kheyl for Cabul on Aug. 23.

On Aug. 25 the Bombay Legislative Council met at Puna to consider the two bills which have been framed by Government for the extension of local self-government in the Presidency.

The Hon. Mr. Peile introduced the bills in a long speech and an animated debate followed, in which most of the members of the Council took part. The non-official members, whilst approving of the principle of the measures, expressed an opinion that they did not go far enough. Eventually the bills were referred to a select committee for consideration, and further discussion was adjourned until December, when the Council will meet in Bombay.

On Thursday, Aug. 23, a crowded meeting of the European and Eurasian inhabitants of Calcutta was held in that city to demand the withdrawal of the Ilbert Bill. In the event of Government not acceding to that request, it was resolved to ask Government to postpone their decision upon the bill until Parliament has had an opportunity of considering the opinions which have been submitted on the subject.

The meeting, which was attended by some two thousand persons, was orderly throughout, and the several resolutions were passed with great enthusiasm and unanimity.

Mr. Atkins, the editor of the Railway Service Gazette, has been despatched as a delegate to the working men in England, to obtain their assistance to prevent the Ilbert Bill from becoming law.

During the week previous to the departure of the mail there has been a renewal of the rainfall in nearly every part of the country excepting the Punjab, where the prospects are very gloomy. Scarcity is inevitable in some districts, and the Punjab Government are already considering the advisability of inaugurating relief works.

Some Canadian missionaries working at Indore complain that they have met with great opposition from the Maharajah Holkar, who has prohibited them from conducting their operations in his territories. On August 19 the missionaries baptised a Cashmere lad of good family, and the circumstance is said to have given rise to great excitement.

A meeting of the Calcutta Missionary Conference was held in Calcutta on Aug. 25, to consider what steps should be taken with regard to the matter.

It is probable that the committee on the Bengal Rent Bill will reassemble in Calcutta about the middle of November, the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, Sir Stuart Bayley, and the Hon. C. P. Ilbert resuming their places on it, with the Hon. W. W. Hunter, vice Sir Evelyn Baring.

The Madras Government will stay at Ooty, pending the return of Mr. Grant Duff from his west coast tour.

The appointment of Mr. Justice Melvill as provisional member of the Council of the Government of Bombay is gazetted.

Colonel Chesney and Mr. W. B. Jones, Commissioner of the Central Provinces, were, on the occasion of Sir Evelyn Baring's investiture on Thursday, invested as Companions of the Star of India.

The installation of his Highness the Maharajah of Kuch Behar is expected to take place on the 8th of November.

The Maharajah of Mysore left Bangalore for his capital on the 16th August.

A scheme is under consideration by the Anjuman-i-Punjab for the establishment of an institute near London for the education of Punjabee youths. It is proposed that the institution should be conducted with due regard to caste observances.

Some proposals have been sent home with regard to the Secretary of State's new code of rules for admission to the Roorkee College, which aroused so much discussion and dissent a few months ago.

The Resident in Turkish Arabia reports that Sharif Khan, a younger brother of the Ameer Shere Ali, died suddenly at Baghdad on the 13th Aug., apparently of heart-disease.

An important letter has been addressed to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce by the Government of India on the subject of a direct line of railway between Bombay and Calcutta.

At a meeting of the Bombay Millowners Association on Aug. 21, it was decided to send a representative to Arabia, Zanzibar, the Cape of Good Hope, and other countries for the purpose of opening up new markets for local-made cotton goods.

There were ninety-six deaths from cholera in Bombay in the week before the mail left, against eighty-six the previous week. The returns from the Deccan districts show that the disease is diminishing, but in the Berars the mortality is very heavy.

A committee has been appointed to consider the arrangements by which the Government can take over the house and grounds of the Kidderpore Orphan Asylum at Calcutta and otherwise provide for the inmates.

The Mayo College at Ajmere will be opened on Jan. 1.

The Poona Fine Arts Exhibition was opened on Wednesday evening, August 22, by Sir James Fergusson.

A Marine Court of Inquiry was held last week to investigate the circumstances attending the wreck of the s.s. Knight of the Bath on a reef near the Kooria Moorla Islands on June 17 last. The court censured the captain for an error of judgment, but decided not to frame any charge against him.

The consolidation of British Biluchistan is proceeding satisfactorily, and the ensuing cold weather will probably see very rapid progress in the completion of various matters of administration which have now been thoroughly thrashed out. Sir Robert Sandeman will, we understand, visit Panjgur, Kharan, and Mekran, and a well-equipped survey party will accompany him.

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

(From the Bombay Gazette.)

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief (General Hardinge) returned to head-quarters at Poona from Sirur on August 19. We hear that one result of the visit has been to settle the question of the movements of the Poona Horse as follows:—Only one troop is to remain at Sirur, and the remainder of the regiment is to go to Poona to take the place of the 2nd Lancers, now under orders for Deesa. This move of the Poona Horse being decided on, there remains the delicate question of compensation to the regiment for houses, &c., a question which, we hope, Government will deal with in a liberal spirit. In due course the Poona Horse will take its turn of Deesa and Neemuch, and so on to Sind; and thus nothing local will remain about it but its name. Major Hogg, the new commandant of the Poona Horse, is admirably qualified to deal with the many questions that must arise on the transfer of the corps from Sirur.

There will be a kind of camp of exercise on a limited scale near Poona this cold weather. It will consist of the troops in and near Poona, and, in addition, of some regiments passing through Poona in course of relief. We understand that no expense will be incurred, but that it will merely be a repetition of the highly successful outing at Pashan last February, on a larger scale. That a gathering of troops—for camp of exercise is too ambitious a term—even on a small scale can be held without expense, was supposed to be an impossibility until General Hardinge proved the contrary, and it is to his energy and persistence that the coming manoeuvres will be due. But this power of organising things without expense has its drawback. The Government of India may say that what has been done once without expense should always be done in the same way, and may try to make a precedent out of what is a purely exceptional incident. The musketry school now being held at Poona is in connection with the Central Rifle Meeting, and is therefore also got up without any expense to the State. So that Bombay must be allowed to set a good example to other Presidencies in the important matter of economy. Whether the Supreme Government will take a mean advantage of this good management on the part of the military authorities in this Presidency, and withhold money grants in future, remains to be seen.

We learn that it is now definitely settled that on Colonel Willoughby, Secretary to Government in the Military Department, going to England on furlough next month, Colonel Pottinger, Deputy Quartermaster-General, will act for him. The place of Colonel Pottinger will be filled by Lieutenant-Colonel Jopp, an Assistant Quartermaster-General on the establishment, now in England on furlough. Colonel Pottinger's advancement will hardly escape comment and criticism. He is an artillery officer, and the appointment he is about to act in is, as we stated before, regarded as belonging peculiarly to the Staff Corps. We think, however, it will be pretty generally conceded that in no other respect can Colonel Pottinger be held to be disqualified for the post.

Lieutenant Colonel F. Eteson, who went home at the beginning of the year on the expiration of his tenure of the appointment of first assistant adjutant general, has taken up the appointment of assistant adjutant general and quartermaster general at home, in the room of Colonel W. H. Knight, and is posted, it is presumed, to the South Eastern district under General Newdigate, his co-assistant being Colonel Buchanan, who commanded the 9th in this country.

Colonel J. P. Turton, Commanding 4th Goorkhas, and at Bakloh, died at Amritsur, on Sunday, August 26. Colonel Turton had been in failing health for some time, and he left Bakloh on the Thursday before his death en route for Kurrachee, for the purpose of appearing before a medical board.

Colonel E. F. Chapman, military secretary to Sir Donald Stewart, who went home in April on medical certificate for six months, accompanies Major General Sir Drury Lowe, who has been selected to attend the autumn manoeuvres of the German Army. Lieutenant Colonel K. G. Henderson, King's Royal Rifle Corps, who served with the 2nd Battalion, also goes with General Lowe. Colonel Chapman will rejoin his appointment at the end of October, when Lieutenant Colonel Gossett will, it is presumed, rejoin his regiment and proceed with it to Peshawar.

Colonel Travers, the military secretary to the Government of Mysore, having proceeded to Europe on sick leave, his excellent billet has been split into two. Colonel Hay, formerly of the Mysore Commission, and lately in charge of the Amlet Mehal, is appointed to act for Colonel Travers as commandant of the Mysore "Barr" Troops, Horse and Foot, and Lieutenant Jones of the 1st Light Cavalry, is to act as adjutant of the Ressalah

Lieutenant Colonel Ramsay, King's Own Borderers, proceeds home immediately, to join the 2nd Battalion.

The Government of India have sanctioned the attendance of the Commander in Chief, Bengal, at the camp of exercise, Bangalore. Sanction has also been accorded to the selection of eight officers from among the regimental commanding officers and Army Staff officers in the Bengal Presidency to accompany his Excellency.

Sir Frederick Roberts, in his orders relative to the camp of exercise to be held at Bangalore, lays great stress on all orders being given in writing, to prevent the possibility of misunderstanding. As so great an authority as General "Bobs" speaks decidedly on this point, it seems rather a pity that sabretaches have been done away with in the Indian Army. Writing materials were always carried in the sabretache, and it is not easy to see how an officer is to put his orders in writing, when he has nothing in which to stow away his pencil and paper.

Major Willis, Brigade Major, Meerut, is granted privilege leave to October 6.

Major Nicolay, Commandant, Calcutta Volunteer Rifles, has offered two prizes of Rs.100 each for the coming season:—Rs.100 to the company with largest percentage of efficient on December 31; Rs.100 to the company with largest percentage of extra-efficient on January 31.

Major Hargreave, Commandant B. B. and C. I. R. Volunteers, is granted eighteen months' leave of absence.

The appointment of Inspector General of Artillery in India will, in all probability, be vacant shortly, owing to the promotion of Colonel (Brigadier General) G. Leslie, the present incumbent, consequent upon the expected retirement of Major General N. Turner, C.B., who, owing to ill health, is unable to accept active employment. Brigadier General Leslie was appointed inspector in October, 1880, and consequently has over two years yet to run.

The two majorities vacant in the Northumberland Fusiliers—by the death of Major J. B. Newbolt and the retirement of Major C. de J. Græme—should cause promotion, the Pioneer remarks, to no less than five captains, owing to three being on staff employ and consequently on the seconded list—Captain Pearce Hobbs since 1879 and Captains Way and Cherry since 1881. Captain C. Hackett becomes Major, vice Græme, and then, after the three on the staff already mentioned, comes Captain Dyke, who only obtained his present rank in 1880, with, however, fifteen years' service as a subaltern.

Captain Dowling, 1st Border Regiment, has been appointed to the Adjutancy of the 3rd Lincolnshire Militia Battalion.

Captain Mack, 12th Lancers, goes home on three months' leave, pending retirement from the service.

Captain Browne, 2nd Devonshire Regiment, has been appointed Station Staff Officer at Naini Tal Depot, vice Vivian, whose tenure of appointment is about to expire.

The following postings have been made:—

Captain Johnson, Liverpool Regiment, to 2nd Battalion; Captain Marsham, King's Royal Rifle Corps, to 4th Battalion; Quartermaster Harrison, East Surrey, to 2nd Battalion; Lieutenant Colonel Carwitten and Major Higgins, King's Own Borderers both to 1st Battalion.

The following officers will proceed home during the ensuing trooping season for depot duty:—Captain Trotman and Lieutenant Capel Cure, 2nd Gloucestershire; Lieutenant Maunsell, 2nd East Yorkshire; Captain Clarke and Lieutenant Hardisty, 1st Worcestershire; and Lieutenant Schombery Kerr, 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade.

Lieutenant Thackwell has been appointed permanent Quartermaster, 20th Bengal Native Infantry.

Lieutenants Newmarch, 2nd Royal Warwickshire, and C. G. Anderson, Royal Artillery, have been appointed to the 32nd and 10th Native Infantry respectively, as probationers for the Staff Corps.

It is stated that Lieutenant G. Rennie, Bengal Staff Corps, Military Account Department, now on six months' leave in India, from Funa, will join at Calcutta, for duty, on the expiration of his leave next month.

Lieutenant A. H. Clark-Kennedy, Madras Staff Corps, sub-assistant commissary general, 2nd class, has passed the final examination prescribed for the Commissariat Department.

Lieutenant P. B. Tindsell, squadron officer, 15th Bengal (Cureton's Mooltanee) Cavalry, is about to proceed on one year's furlough.

Lieutenant J. B. Sharpe, R.E., whose tour of Indian service expired on July 31, has reverted to the Imperial Establishment.

Sixty days' privilege leave has been granted to Lieutenant Ellison, Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, Allahabad.

Lieutenant Carter, 1st Battalion York and Lancaster Regiment, has been appointed a probationer for the Bombay Staff Corps.

Lieutenant Douglas James Orr Taylor, King's Own Borderers, officiating wing officer, 13th Bombay N.I., is admitted to the Staff Corps from May 25, 1880; and Lieutenant H. J. Foster, 2nd Battalion E. Y. Regiment, officiating squadron officer, 3rd Bombay Light Cavalry, is admitted from April 1, 1882.

A DISHONEST COMPROMISE.

THE confidence reposed in Reuter's Agency by Lord Ripon gives a quasi-official authority to the announcement, which reaches England through that channel, that the Government of India proposes to compromise the Ilbert Bill, by restricting the enlarged jurisdiction to Native Covenanted Civilians who are District Magistrates or Judges, and further, by giving the European accused a chance of having his case (if the circumstances seem to warrant it) transferred to the High Court. We sincerely hope, however, that the Government of India had as little to do with this announcement, as it had—according to the Pall Mall Gazette's anonymous Simla friend—with the last Reuterian arithmetical puzzle. Nor will we readily believe that Lord Ripon would consent so to besmirch his fair fame as to be a party to a miserable shift, in regard to which it would be difficult to say whether its dishonesty or its imbecility is the more prominent feature. Hitherto Lord Ripon's faults have been those of a weak, vain, and consequently obstinate man, full of blind belief in foolish Radical notions, with a craze for popularity, and with unbounded opportunities for trying most dangerous experiments. But these viceregal failings, mischievous as their results have proved, are something altogether different from the moral obliquity that would condescend to an attempt to cheat both the Native and European communities by a juggle of words, transparently contrived so as at once to mock the Native and insult the European, to aggravate the ill feeling that has been so wantonly aroused, and to do no earthly good to a single living being—and all to save the amour propre of a ruler who has proved himself hopelessly incompetent. If such a proposal were to be seriously made, an Act of the Imperial Legislature of India would be degraded to the level of a trick of political legerdemain, so clumsily disguised as to be contemptible for its stupidity, and yet sufficiently deceitful to be hated for its insincerity.

First, as to its morality. Will any supporter of Lord Ripon contend that such an Act would agree with all, or any, of the pretentious "high-falutin" that has formed the staple of the highly moral excuses that have been offered for this cruel attack on the tenderest susceptibilities of Englishmen and Englishwomen in India? Will it be pretended that such an Act advances one step in the direction of "redressing the wrongs of our forefathers," over which Mr. Bright's moral pocket-handkerchief gets moistened, whenever there is a chance of sowing a little hatred between Englishmen and Indians? Or will it, on the other hand, be alleged that the wounded feelings of Europeans in India are likely to be comforted by the insulting restrictions proposed to be placed on the European jurisdiction of Native Magistrates? Such an idea well befits those who meanly suppose that the European hostility to the Ilbert Bill is based on jealousy of the Native; but to the minds of the honest opponents of the Bill, a compromise that robs Englishmen of their birthright becomes doubly hateful when at the same time it is seen to wound the just pride of the Natives.

Next, as to the expediency of the suggested compromise. Is it supposed that such a proposal will be in the least acceptable to any one section of the Indian community? Will it render possible a return of those old friendly relations between Englishmen and Indians, that were daily becoming more and more cordial before Lord Ripon cast this dark shadow over the scene? Will it content either the Natives, or the much injured Anglo-Indians? Does anyone suppose that it will even calm the excited souls of Mr. Fogg and Mr. Holyoake, and the five-and-forty Radical gentlemen who meet so frequently "in support of Lord Ripon's policy?"

We do not ask whether it will satisfy the Bengali agitators—nothing would satisfy those gentlemen, and, therefore, they need not be considered. But we do ask, will it satisfy the high-minded and loyal gentlemen of Bengal and of the rest of India, who desire nothing more, in regard to this wretched question, than that it should be settled once for all and quickly, in such a way as to restore peace to the distracted land, with due regard to Native feeling? It has been shown over and over again that, so long as the law merely gave the European accused a privilege—which was the privilege of the accused, not the disability of the Judge—no Indian gentleman, whether Judge or layman, had any right to complain of an arrangement which did not at all touch him, provided justice was done. But to give Native Magistrates and Judges, amid an infinite amount of blowing of trumpets and beating of drums, an infinitesimal increase of jurisdiction with one hand, and with the other to take it away by dodges characterised by the most odious hypocrisy, is not only to cast a most undeserved slur on an honourable body of men who have never asked for these delicate Pecksniffian attentions, but also to insult the intelligence of the whole Native Community.

But is there any more reason to suppose that such a compromise would satisfy the Anglo-Indians, or that they would be consenting parties to such base trickery? They have throughout, with the most transparent sincerity, declared (see the speeches of Mr. Keswick and Mr. A. B. Miller, at the recent Calcutta meeting) that they have no quarrel with the Natives in this matter still less with the Native Magistrates and Judges. They desire to hurt no one's feelings, and they cast no aspersions on any one's character or ability. All they demand is—and this they demand with English frankness and English determination—to be left in the peaceful possession of their birthright, as Englishmen to be tried by Englishmen. Are they such mean creatures as to be consoled for the loss of this birthright by the robber's assurance that he will manage to give it back to them in an underhand, dishonourable fashion, after the deed is done? Are they even likely to feel any security that the dishonourable promise would be honourably performed for any length of time, further than it might be quite convenient to fulfil it?

And lastly, does any foolish member of this most foolish Government suppose that such a compromise will appease the Radical fury that Mr. Chamberlain and the Caucus have been pumping up? If so, we would advise that sanguine person to read the Radical papers. It may be that a few will content themselves—after declaring that the crushing of Anglo-Indians is the one thing needful for the regeneration of India—with scoffing at the feebleness that quails before reason and common sense. This is what the Newcastle Daily Chronicle says about it:—

“Most of the bad feeling which has lately existed respecting the Ilbert Bill, may be traced to the contention between those demanding that it should be largely modified and the Government resolutely determined to pass it, as it is. If the communication from Simla which we print this morning is to be credited, the authorities have given way, and the measure is to be shorn of the features most objected to by the European residents. The district magistrates and the session judges are to have their jurisdiction limited, and matters are to be so arranged as to permit the transference of European cases to the High Courts. Considering the report of authoritative opinions on the subject lately published, the Government have doubtless acted wisely in giving way. It would have looked better, perhaps, if their spokesmen had been less dogmatic to begin with. It is also true that this shifting of the ground is not calculated to cause an increase of confidence in the measure.”

But the more part will rage as furiously as ever. Hear what comfortable words the Nottingham Daily Express has for Lord Ripon:—

“Although it will be advisable to wait for the return itself before arriving at a definite conclusion, there appears little room for doubt that official opinion throughout India, from that of high commissioners and judges down to army officers and district assessors, is opposed to the Ilbert Bill. It is to be feared that the acting hostility of Anglo-Indians and others in this country, coupled with these adverse reports of Indian officials will necessitate the withdrawal of the measure. In such an event it is most unlikely that Lord Ripon would consent to continue at the head of affairs in India.”

And once more, we will quote the views of the Western Morning News:—

“Lord Ripon compromises. He is going so to modify the Ilbert Bill that it will be impossible for the Indian Government to avail itself of the services as magistrates of those Hindu gentlemen of high position and good reputation whom it is so necessary to interest in the Government of India. It is a pity; but it is hoped that the compromise will end the controversy. ‘I maintain,’ writes an old Anglo-Indian, ‘that the Ilbert Bill, if passed, would cause anarchy and rebellion amongst the brave, honest, loyal, and independent Sikhs, the Punjabis, and our frontier tribes, who require a very strong hand to keep them in order, and would never for one moment allow Bengalees or Parsees, whom they despise, to rule over them. Lord Stanley of Alderley says, ‘But the Bengalees were never intended to rule over them, but only over the English.’ This makes the matter far worse, for the brave warlike Sikhs would say, ‘These English permit weak Bengalees to punish and imprison them,’ and that would be sure to lead to anarchy and rebellion. Under the circumstances, leave well alone, until you have educated them up to our standard, and set Sikhs to rule over Sikhs, and Bengalees to rule in Bengal, but not out of it.’ I maintain, on the contrary, that the Ilbert Bill, if it be abandoned, will produce so much disappointment that we shall be on the eve of a possible mutiny.”

We need hardly say that the three journals we have quoted represent the most “advanced” Radical opinions in the kingdom. If the Government thinks that any concession to justice and reason is compatible with retaining the favour of its more fanatical adherents, perhaps it may be disabused of its error by the two last quotations. It is more than probable that the fear of the monster that, Frankenstein-like, he has created, is one of the most powerful motives inciting Lord Ripon to persist in evil; but since the fanatics must be offended in any case, surely the wiser as well as the more manly course would be to cast away the accursed thing at once and altogether.

THE NEW LIBERAL DOGMA CONCERNING ANGLO-INDIAN “INTERLOPERS.”

We reprint elsewhere the Daily News article of last Wednesday, which has (perhaps not unreasonably) created such a painful impression on those few faithful Abdiels among Anglo-Indians who still call themselves Liberals. We earnestly commend the article to the careful study of our Liberal friends; for the position of the Daily News, as the recognised organ of Mr. Gladstone's Ministry, and the solitary London journal of the front rank that has been able to survive the profession of Radical principles, gives it the importance of a political manifesto. What the Daily News says to-day, Mr. Gladstone probably said privately yesterday, and will say publicly to-morrow, if the “feeler” does not meet with too hostile a reception; so that a plain and clear declaration on its part of a settled policy in regard to any particular class is well worthy of the attention of that class.

What, then, is the teaching of the oracle as to the policy of the Liberal Party—or, at least, of the present Liberal Government—towards the non-official Englishmen resident in, or connected with, India? Our readers will find the answer in another column, in the Daily News own words. But first, it may be worth while to inquire what is the causa teferrima belli, what is it that has brought down on the heads of the non-official Anglo-Indians the curses of the Liberal mouth-piece. The article shows that all these maledictions spring from a mistaken notion—one of those blunders of crass ignorance that have been so characteristic of the Radical support of that “measure of justice and benevolence,” the Ilbert Bill—that the local reports, with which we were all “Reuterised” last week, proceed mainly from non-officials. It will be seen from the last paragraph of the article that this astonishing “mistake” is put forward almost in plain terms. What wonder, then, that the whole class of non-official Anglo-Indians is vilified in the language of bitter contempt? We are told that they are “interlopers,” who come to India with the one object of making money; and that, consequently, the Viceroy is under no obligation whatever to pay the slightest regard to their feelings or interests. “The Viceroy,” we are instructed, “is accountable, not to Anglo-India, but to Native India;” “the English rule India for the Indians;” the non-official English are people to “whom the Government of India has no direct political relation,” and they “have nothing to do with the Government.” De minimis non curat lex; and the inference to be drawn from it all is, that if Anglo-Indian non-officials cannot accommodate themselves to the despotic will of Lord Ripon, they had better pack off, bag and baggage. And the Daily News is good enough to tell us who are the insignificant degraded creatures, about whose sordid opinions Lord Ripon need not in the least concern himself; they are “the merchants, bankers, shopkeepers, indigo-planters, tea-growers, railway-men, in a word, all those who are not servants of the Government.” We must confess for our own part, we have failed to discover, in this description, any logical ground for the vitriolic scorn that is poured upon one of the most patriotic, most public-spirited, most thoroughly and typically English communities on the face of the earth. We leave the consideration of this puzzle to our Liberal friends. Of course, the suspicion that the very qualities which have aroused in us admiration—patriotism, public spirit, Englishry—may have had something to do with exciting this outburst of Radical wrath, is one that could only occur to an unregenerate, unspeakable Tory:

HOME NEWS.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The tenders for Rs. 25,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on Wednesday at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were:—In bills on Calcutta, Rs. 32,000, and Bombay, Rs. 1,10,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7½d.; in telegraphic transfers on Calcutta, Rs. 28,50,000, and Bombay, Rs. 3,37,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7½31d.—or a total of Rs. 33,29,000. Tenders for bills on both Presidencies at 1s. 7½d. will receive in full, and for telegraphic transfers at 1s. 7 17-32d. about 75 per cent. Later on in the day one lakh of transfers was allotted on Madras and two on Bombay at 1s. 7 9-16d. in each case. Between April 1, and September 11 the total amount of remittances sold reached Rs. 8,43,46,350, and realised £6,828,318.

DEPARTURE OF THE JUMNA.—The Indian troopship Jumna left Portsmouth on Wednesday afternoon with the 1st Battalion Royal Irish Fusiliers (formerly the 87th Regiment) for Bombay. The battalion, which is intended to be stationed at Rawal Pindi, Bengal, was constituted as follows:—26 officers—viz., Lieut. Cols. Stevenson and Todd, Majors Taylor, Money, and Dashwood, Capts. England, Gardner, Martin, and Stevenson, Lieuts. Adams, Davison, Wilbraham, Tyrwhitt-Walker, Kincaid, Barry, the Hon. E. B. Stopford, Blood, Henry, Wolfe, Connor, Malock, Barnard, and Saudys, Paymaster Anderson, Adjutant Cusack, and Quartermaster Cole, 622 non-commissioned officers and men, 39 women, and 62 children. In addition to the Fusiliers, the Jumna took out 387 men of the 1st Royal Irish Regiment, 83 men of the 2nd Leicester Regiment, Lieut. Dyer and 74 men of the 17th Lancers, and the following individual officers:—Major Curran and Lieut. De Witton, Connaught Rangers; Lieut. Raymond, Irish Rifles; Lieut. Macconchy, East Yorkshire Regiment; Lieut. Copland, 2nd Leicestershire; Lieut. Campbell, Scotch Rifles; Lieut. Carruthers, 2nd Devonshire; Lieuts. Cripps and Raith, Leinster Regiment; the Rev. J. Boase, Chaplain's Department; Capt. Pitt, R.E.; Capt. Keighley and Vyse, and Lieut. De Boath, Bengal Staff Corps; Surgeon Goldsmith, Bombay Medical Service; Capt. Pryse and Lieut. Stevens, Madras Staff Corps; Lieut. Parsons, Bengal Lancers; Surgeon Young, Bengal Medical Service; Lieut. Scott, East Lancashire Regiment; Major Olabby, Bombay P.W. Department; and Surgeons-Major Walsh and Walker, and Surgeons Conolly, Nealon, Wright, Skinner, and Goldsmith, Army Medical Department. The Jumna will return to England on December 31 with time-expired men and invalids.

THE SILVER MARKET AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.—Advices received from Calcutta announce an advance in the Bank of Bengal rate of discount to 6 per cent. This, taken in connection with the large allotment of Council drafts on Wednesday, points to a scarcity of money in India and a growing demand for remittances from this side, which is due probably to the enormous movements of wheat which have been and are still going on. Further than this, there will soon be other kinds of produce coming to the ports, such as jute and seeds, and the effect of these several circumstances will be a continuance of the demand for silver, the market for which is firm. No business was done on Thursday to any extent, because recent supplies were already disposed of. The quotations current for both bars and dollars were therefore almost nominal. The Calcutta rate for telegraphic transfers advanced to 1s. 7 17-32d., but the Bombay rate remained at 1s. 7 7/8d. Rates in China were also unaltered, at 5s. 1d. in Shanghai and 3s. 8 3/4d. in Hongkong. Rupee Paper was quoted at former prices.—The market having been drained of its available resources continues firm under the influence of an Indian demand which appears to be strong enough to absorb all amounts that may come to hand. For the present business remains more or less in abeyance, and prices are unchanged at 50 11-16d. for bars and 49 7-16d. per ounce for Mexican dollars. On Saturday the Calcutta telegraphic transfer rate was maintained at 1s. 7 9-16d., but the Parsee holidays, which began in Bombay on that day and will last till to-morrow, have checked business there. China exchange rates showed no alteration, but advices from Shanghai say that the tendency was rather easier. Rupee Paper was quiet, the Four-and-a-Half per Cent. closing at 84 to 84 1/2, ex the half-yearly interest now due, and the Four per Cent. at 80 1/2 to 81.—On Tuesday business was kept within very narrow limits, in consequence of the smallness of available means. Prices were, however, fully maintained, at 50 3/4d. for bars and 49 1/2d. for dollars. The Calcutta rate for telegraphic transfers was unaltered at 1s. 7 9-16d., but the Shanghai quotation for four months' bills was a little easier at 5s. 0 3/4d. The Hongkong rate remained at 3s. 8 1/2d. Rupee Paper was unaltered, and a fair business was done.

PRODUCE MARKETS.—Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson state that some of the markets for imported produce exhibit a tendency to improvement. The reduction in the Bank rate from 4 to 3 1/2 per cent., announced this morning, had very little influence, a fall of 1 per cent. being generally anticipated. Transactions in sugar are larger than for many weeks past, the diminished stocks of cane grown, with the extended consumption and the uncertainty as to the yield of beet, inducing the refiners to operate with more confidence at current low quotations. West India Muscovado closes fully 6d. per cwt. above the depressed rates ruling in the beginning of the month, and common brown Eastern kinds attract more attention. Refined shows a similar advance, also beet for October, December shipment. The tea market is firmer, with gradually hardening prices for fair to medium grades of congou, these ranging from 1/2d. to 1d. per lb. above the lowest point reached in August. Indian teas fully support last week's quotations, a strong and brisk demand prevailing. Ceylon growths have realised high rates. At the Dutch Trading Company's sale of coffee on Wednesday the valuations were in all cases exceeded, good ordinary Java being about 29 3/4 to 30 cents. Other descriptions went from 1 to 3 cents. dearer. The market here is firm, being rather higher for Guatemala and Costa Rica. Rice cargoes have sold at slightly easier rates. Black and white pepper maintain their high value. Zanzibar cloves have further given way.

DISASTER AT SEA.—Lloyd's agent at Bombay telegraphed on Sunday that the steamers William Symington and the Bertie have been in collision. The former vessel is badly damaged; will probably discharge cargo, and go into dock for repairs. The Bertie is not damaged. The William Symington is bound from Bombay to Port Said; she is an iron steamer of 1,323 tons, built at Sunderland in 1877, classed 100 A1, and owned by Messrs. J. Marychurch and Company, Cardiff.

DEPARTURE OF THE SERAPIS.—The Serapis left Portsmouth on Sunday morning for India, calling at Queenstown to complete her list of passengers. She embarked at Portsmouth on the previous day the 2nd and 3rd Batteries, 1st Brigade, Scottish Division, Scottish Artillery, comprising Capt. Walker and Gubbins, and Major Price, Capt. Richards, and Lieuts. Anderson and Hobbyn, and 67 men. They will be stationed at the Murree Hills and Fort William. The other troops consisted of

At Queenstown there will embark the E Battery, 1st Brigade, Royal Artillery, for Kirkee, consisting of Major M'Causland, Capt. Western, Lieuts. Tisdall, Carroll, and Johnson, and 87 men; drafts of Artillery, consisting of Major Knox, Capt. Hansard, Lieuts. Ford, Galbraith, Thorpe, Gordon, Kaye, and Butcher, and 174 men; a detachment of Welsh Fusiliers, consisting of 140 men; Infantry drafts, consisting of Capt. Andrews and Lieut. Heygate, 1st Border Regiment; Lieut. Davis, 2d Manchester; Capt. Marsham, 4th Rifle Corps; Lieuts. Smith and Gill, 2d Hampshire; Lieut. Carden, 1st Oxfordshire; Major Harris, 2d Middlesex; Lieut. Campbell, 2d Royal Fusiliers; Capt. Adamson, and Lieuts. Whiterly, Ellis, and Griffiths, 1st South Yorkshire; Major Bald, 1st Essex Regiment; Lieut. Hamilton, 1st West Riding; Lieut. Fry, 2d West Yorkshire; Lieut. Hamilton, 1st South Yorkshire, and 618 men; and Capt. Price, R.E.; and Deputy Surgeon General Tarrant, and Surgeons Major Farrel and White, Army Medical Department. The total passenger list amounts to 67 officers, 1,170 men, and 120 women and children. The Serapis will return to Portsmouth on Jan. 4 with the H and L-Batteries, 1st Brigade, Royal Artillery, and time-expired men and invalids.

At the annual general meeting of the "Bee" Land and House Property Investment Company (Limited), held at the offices of the Company, 111, Victoria-street, Westminster, S.W., on the 31st ult., a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum was declared, free of income tax—a balance being carried forward equal to another 36 1/2 per cent. upon the share capital.

ECARTE. By "AQUARIUS." PRICE ONE SHILLING.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"The author in a few pages gives all that is required to enable a tyro to become an intelligent and successful player. To render Ecarté less dependent on drawing the king of trumps, the author suggests a modification in the scoring."—United Service Gazette.

"Whoever 'Aquarius' may be, it is very certain that in writing of Ecarté he is quite at home. This compact and shrewd little handbook is worth studying, even by those who know the fascinating game."—Society.

"This is a good guide to the game of Ecarté, the rules being clearly explained, the examples numerous and instructive, and the concluding advice sound."—Naval and Military Gazette.

"Here is a small shilling book of a size really suitable for the pocket, and containing a most masterly exposition of all that we need to enable us to play this game. Ecarté having been somewhat neglected, the present work should go well."—St. Stephen's Review.

"A little handbook useful to all those who wish to know the game. It is neatly got up, and the descriptions in it and the rules given are extremely clear; while diagrams show particular hands."—Scotsman.

"This is an excellent guide to a capital game, which, as 'Aquarius' observes, has some similarity to whist, though it is a game for two players. Excellent, too, is the advice at the end of the little book."—Broad Arrow.

"Shows unmistakable signs of real talent."—Whitehall Review.

"The authoress must be congratulated on her maiden effort. The character of Muriel is admirably drawn."—Sunday Times.

"There are evidences of power in this book."—The Academy.

"A novel which will doubtless find many readers."—Morning Post.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A quaint and undoubtedly clever book from the pen of a native of India. The volume consists of a series of short sketches of scenes and people in Gujarat, which may be regarded as typical of classes of the community, their ways of life and modes of thought. Mr. Malabari's English style is remarkably good, and seldom exhibits any want of ease. His book is of special interest as throwing some light on the real feeling of the natives with regard to their British rulers."—Daily Telegraph.

"The book is clever throughout."—Academy.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing purures and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessions they guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1/30th that of real diamonds.

THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EX- PRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 200 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE ILBERT BILL.

OPINIONS OF THE ENGLISH PRESS ON THE ILBERT BILL TELEGRAM.

["ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE."]

WHAT may be the value of the private telegram to a contemporary, over which the Daily News is so jubilant this (Sept. 12) morning, we can hardly estimate until we get some more precise information about its origin. At any rate, the manager of Reuter's Telegraph Agency must be aware that the so-called explanation given by his correspondent is worse than no explanation at all. This gentleman telegraphed that "out of a total of 140" published opinions on the Ilbert Bill, 114 are in favour of and twenty-six opposed to the principle or policy of the measure." Some days afterwards, the statement, which meanwhile had passed into every newspaper in the three kingdoms, was found to be false and misleading. Then, the agent who sent it being interrogated, he replies, "There was a mistake in transmitting the figures; I wrote 205 against, and not twenty-six." But how could that have been, considering that he said at the same time that the total number of opinions was 140? The numbers 205 and 114 do not make 140; while it happens that twenty-six and 114 do. The Reuter's Company should see to this. Their correspondent's explanation is too evidently wanting in completeness, or in candour. Meanwhile, and on the strength of this most manifest equivocation, we are asked by the admirers of Lord Ripon's Government whether it is not a shameful thing to suspect any of its members of attempting to delude the public at home by false statements. The answer to that question is—certainly not. Nothing can be more natural; nothing in its way can be more completely justified. Is it not true that, on official authority, this same Reuter's Agency was employed, and paid, to send to England a garbled account of a certain debate in Council on this same Ilbert Bill? And if it is true, is it not rather ridiculous to affect indignation at the suspicion that what was done once had been done again?

["EVENING NEWS."]

THERE appears this morning in the Daily News an article on the English in India which is one of the most culpably unpatriotic compositions ever printed in a newspaper. Our contemporary is very angry because the European residents in India do not like Mr. Ilbert's Bill. These unfortunate persons are accordingly held up to odium of the bitterest kind, and denounced as "interlopers." We are warned that they are of no political importance, and that the Government of India is not in any way responsible to them for its acts and deeds. "The Viceroy," we are told, "is accountable not to Anglo India, but to Native India," and "the English rule India for Indians." This puerile twaddle would not be considered worth notice were it not printed in the Daily News and put forth there as a semi-official manifesto of Liberal policy. It has long been the practice of the Government when it meant to appeal to the Radical sentiment of the country, to do so first by "feeling for it" through the Daily News, and we may, therefore, look for a reply to the opposition of the European residents in India in the promulgation of this doctrine that they are mere "interlopers," to whom the Government owe no responsibility, and for whom they need not care a straw. It would be easy to comment on the naked immorality of such a doctrine, involving as it does the proposition that a civilised Government owes no duty towards any portion of its subjects when these are non-official and of the same race as the official class. We may pass on to remind those who preach this new Liberal doctrine that if the Viceroy is bound merely to act on the wishes of the natives of India his first duty would be to depart bag and baggage whenever they came to regard him as a "interloper" because he is an Englishman. But we should like to know two things. If the new Liberal theory is that the Viceroy rules "India for the Indians," how is it that from the same quarter the cry of "Perish India" every now and then ascends to the skies? If the unofficial Europeans are mere "interlopers" in India, whose opinions are of little account, how came it that the Liberal newspapers attached such exaggerated importance to them when, owing to a blunder in telegraphy, it was reported they were dead in favour of the Ilbert Bill? But let the country look at the list of people in India whom the Liberals propose to treat as "interlopers." They are, says the Daily News with incautious candour, only all "the merchants, bankers, shopkeepers, indigo-planters, tea-growers, railway men; in a word, all those who are not servants of the Government." These are the people who have made India, so far as developing her resources is concerned; in fact, they may be described as persons who by their intelligence, skill, and capital undo most of the mischief which bad official financing has often done. But they are of only secondary account in India according to the new Liberal theory. They "have nothing to do with the Government," and they are people "to whom the Government of India has no direct political relation." Here we have real statesmanship at last revealed to us. It consists in ruling a country in defiance of the opinion of all the non-official people in it who have any social or industrial position—who sink numberless millions of capital in promoting its prosperity, who make its roads and its railways, who carry its commerce to every shore in ships that plough the waters of every clime, who by courage, and endurance, and lavish expenditure of skill, not only help to till the soil, but introduce, as the tea-planters did, a new industry of inexhaustible wealth to a country where it is of the first consequence to bring employment to a gutted labour market. All we have to do to make our dominion prosperous is according to Liberalism as expounded by the Daily News, to treat these people as "interlopers," as persons to whom the Government owe no duty or responsibility. That it is only possible to defend the policy of Lord Ripon by making political lunacy like this the basis of his defence is, perhaps, the strongest proof that can be given of the utter and incurable badness of that policy.

["BRISTOL TIMES."]

IT is not too severe a censure to pass on the conduct of Lord Ripon and his advisers who were responsible for the telegram which reached this country on Friday, to stigmatise the attempt to conceal from the masses at home the true state of official opinion in India on the Ilbert Bill by a wilful misrepresentation as one of the most scandalous and immoral acts that could disgrace the regime of a Governor General of the Indian Empire. On Friday we were told through Reuter's Agency that the sum total of officials who had reported on the obnoxious measure amounted to 140; of these it was declared that 114 were in favour of, and twenty-six opposed to, the principle of the Ilbert Bill. How far this statement was from the actual truth is made plain by the telegram from the correspondent of the Times, which appeared in Monday's issue, and the discrepancy is no less marvellous than it is impudent. It was a clever device to send home the lying telegram through Reuter's Agency, and not as an official communication from Calcutta to the India Office; it was thought that the public would more readily lay aside their prejudices and their opposition to this Bill if the report appeared through an independent agency. But fortunately this device had been unmasked already this year when employed in connection with this identical measure, and this it is which heightens the audacity of repeating the outrageous trick for the purpose of deceiving the British public. The admission had to be made in the House of Commons this session that the telegram sent home as Reuter's had been composed at Government House at Calcutta, and was paid for by the Government authorities; and those who, by Lord Ripon's directions or with his assent, adopted that course, reported only such remarks on the Bill in the Viceroy's Council as seemed to be in its favour, and thus wholly and wilfully misled opinion at home as to the real tenour of that debate, and as to the actual views expressed by the large majority of those who spoke. It is well known that the Times has the privilege of commanding the telegraphic communication from Calcutta to London for some hours on Sundays, and the Indian news on Monday is thus anxiously expected and read with great interest. It was the Times telegram which, forty-eight hours after Lord Ripon had, through Reuter's Agency, flashed his falsehoods before the public, exposed the wicked scheme and laid bare the true state of affairs. Again the same correspondent has unmasked the scandalous tactics to which Lord Ripon, in his desperation, has again resorted, and Monday morning refuted Saturday's falsehoods. The Nemesis is all the more severe, as the Calcutta correspondent could not have been aware of the official account which had been manufactured, and simply related the full and honest report of what had taken place. The true state of the figures, instead of those who have quoted above, was a total of 286 official European and native opinions sent in, excluding the heads of Governments and High Courts, and of these 188 are for withdrawal, thirty-six Europeans for a compromise, and thirteen in favour of passing the Bill, while forty-nine natives are in favour of passing the measure or of a compromise.

The contrast between these two sets of figures speaks for itself, and we think the short-sighted ingenuity of Lord Ripon may over-reach itself and defeat at his object, for those at home who have been disposed to view this dangerous measure with too much apathy and unconcern will begin to consider whether there must not be something very evil in its design, and some inherent weakness in its proposals, to require that one occupying the high position held by Lord Ripon should have recourse to tactics so degrading and so immoral. Not the least striking feature in the summary of the reports is that of sixty-four native officials who were consulted, fifteen should have advised the absolute withdrawal of the Bill, while the remaining forty-nine are divided between insisting on its being passed and adopting some compromise. Thus it will be seen that natives who have had experience of official life can emancipate themselves from the natural prejudices of their race and caste, and can acknowledge that the jurisdiction of the natives over Europeans is unnecessary and unwise, and that to press such a proposal in the face of the opposition it has raised is to throw back the progress of India, to destroy the good feeling between the black man and the white which is so essential to the prosperity of the country, and to undo all that has been accomplished in the way of good government, since the dreadful days of the Mutiny. These are the considerations which Englishmen at home should seriously weigh in determining to support their fellow-countrymen in India, or, on the other hand, to ignore their appeal for aid. The suggestion which is now offered, that certain alterations shall be made in the Bill, effecting some sort of compromise with its opponents, seems to us only less devoid of statesmanship than the original introduction of the measure. To make any compromise such as is proposed, so that the Bill shall only apply to district magistrates and sessions judges, is to abandon the whole principle of the Bill. As a matter of fact, these officers are only members of the Covenanted Service, and the natives, never very numerous in that service, are ceasing altogether to join it; thus they will be insulted by the offer of a measure nominally giving them privileges which it practically denies, while they will only feel a temporary disappointment at its absolute withdrawal. Such a compromise also would create an anomaly far greater than that which the Bill is intended to remove; for, while at present the grievance is stated to be that the natives are not on an equality with Europeans, the proposed compromise would raise the most invidious distinctions between natives themselves engaged in the service of the Crown.

But the preponderance of opinion hostile to the measure, which was to be the crowning-stone of Lord Ripon's career in India, but which promises to leave an indelible stain of disgrace on the history of his Viceroyalty, is not merely a preponderance of numbers—experience, eminent reputations, statesmanship, and independent thought are all on the side of the opponents of the Bill. In Assam and Bengal, which are the districts where the measure would have the most effect, it has not found a single European supporter, and the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal and the Chief Commissioners of Assam and Coorg are amongst the heads of administrations who recommend the withdrawal of the Bill. The Times correspondent classifies the opinions under three heads—"The first class, including the great majority both in number and weight, consists of those who advocate a withdrawal of the Bill. The second is a very small class, consisting of those who advise the Government to pass the Bill. The third class is larger than the second, but much smaller than the first—it is formed of those who advocate some form of compromise. This third class might be sub-divided into many sub-classes, according to the nature of the compromise proposed. It would be quite wrong to reckon all members of the third class as supporters of the principle of the Bill. For the most part they ground their support of some form of compromise on the notion that the Government cannot afford to admit its mistake, and that the Europeans will be unduly elated or the natives offended by a withdrawal." The reasons given by the Commander-in-Chief in Bombay for opposing the measure are most deserving of attention and respect. He says, "If the native civilians are taught to consider as a stigma the incapacity to try Europeans, the native officers of the army will learn the same lesson, and hold it a stigma that they are not allowed to sit on European court-martials, or to command European troops." Those who, ignoring the true issues at stake, have urged a compromise, are influenced by the desire to break the fall for Lord Ripon in his effort to retire from untenable ground, and also some of them have an eye to the favours of Government House. We trust that the welfare of India will not be sacrificed, to save the wounded amour propre of a weak Viceroy. The measure was begotten of bungling incompetence and fatuous conceit; its consignment for ever to the limbo of abortions can be the only atonement for its conception.

["PETERBOROUGH STANDARD."]

THIS week England has been again misled as to Indian opinion on the Ilbert Bill. A false impression was given on a former occasion by a telegram which the Indian Government palmed off as one of Reuter's. This time the numbers for and against the Bill were given incorrectly, the error, of course, being in favour of the Bill. Reuter states that the blunder was a telegraphic one. It is remarkable that the Indian Government should ever have tried to mislead English opinion, as deception was sure to be observed. If the second misleading telegram was an accident, the Government must be particularly unfortunate. It is well known that Ministers are loth to admit the mistake they have made in introducing the measure, which is bolstered up by the circulation of mendacious statistics.

["FIFESHIRE JOURNAL."]

THE use of the false telegram through Reuter about Indian opinion in its relation to the Ilbert Bill is getting too familiar; but the latest is a very bad instance of it. On Friday the Simla agent of Reuter forwarded as "published opinions" about the Bill 114 as favourable and twenty-six as the reverse. In twenty-four hours after the Times correspondent at Calcutta forwarded quite a different story altogether, inasmuch that the Secretary of Reuter in London sent to inquire, with this result:—"The Simla agent placed on the wires 114 as favourable and 205 as against the principle and policy of the Bill, these including European and native officials and non-officials. From this it would seem that Lord Ripon's humanitarian Government has somewhere in its service at Simla a daring, not less than a diligent, propagator of falsehoods. It is less apparent that he is succeeding in thus seeking to manufacture a humanitarian public opinion for the sentimental Viceroy."

["WESTERN MORNING NEWS."]

WE regret very much to have to acknowledge that in speaking of the opinion of the local authorities in India upon the Ilbert Bill, we were in error. Reuter's telegram turns out to be untrue in many particulars, and misleading altogether. There is no reason whatever for saying that the men responsible for the detailed government of India are in favour of giving to a few picked native magistrates the right to try Europeans. We may say, and do say, that their fears are strained and ridiculous; that they anticipate evils which can never arise, and wish to postpone a good which, when it is forced from us, will be regarded as no boon; but they are by an overwhelming majority against Lord Ripon's policy, and the agreement among them is such that unanimity itself would hardly be more impressive. In Bombay thirty—and those the most important authorities—out of fifty are against this bill, and only five in favour of proceeding with it as it stands. In Madras out of seventeen, fourteen are against the Bill altogether, and only one in favour of proceeding with it as it stands. In the Punjab, out of twenty opinions of Europeans, there is not one in favour of passing the Bill, four advocating a compromise and sixteen recommending an entire withdrawal. Of the eight natives' opinions, all are for passing the Bill. In Coorg, of three Europeans' opinions, all are for withdrawal; while of the three natives' opinions, one is for withdrawal and two are for proceeding. In Hyderabad, of eight opinions of Europeans, seven advocate withdrawal, and one is for passing the Bill. In British Burma the only opinions given are those of the five Commissioners of Divisions. Three of them would withdraw the Bill, two would pass it; but of these two, one disapproves of its principle, and the other admits that his opinion is opposed to that of all the officers whom he has consulted. The Recorder of Rangoon also opposes the Bill. So we might go on, but the net result is this:—European opinions asked, 222; for withdrawal, 173; for compromise, thirty-six; for proceeding, thirteen. The Judges are against the Bill as it stands; and we have to acknowledge the fact that if Lord Ripon proceeds it will be against the opinion, not only of the men who regard the native as the "d—d nigger," but of nearly the whole European opinion of the Indian Empire.

Then why do we say "Proceed with the Bill?" Because, it seems to us, there are only two arguments used against the Bill. The first, which touches us closely, is the shrinking of Englishmen in India from anything like subjection to native jurisdiction. The second, which is not so striking, is the right of an Englishman to be tried by his peers. As to the first, we believe the whole idea which underlies it to be a false one—and so far as it is founded on reality, the only way of raising the native to a moral equality with the Englishman is to admit him gradually to a political and social equality. The dividing line keeps up old prejudices in the race, and confirms them in their superstitions. Once let equality be acknowledged, and those admitted to responsibilities who are worthy of it, and the old traditions of Zenana training will at once begin to become obsolete. As to the English right to trial by peers, it is balanced upon the other side by the need of protecting the natives. Things have improved rapidly since it was the custom to send native servants to a magistrate "for a dozen," and the use of violence has disappeared from among the better classes; but there are hundreds and thousands of people of a lower grade who think the native a creature to be "walloped" when he goes wrong; and there has been a tendency to condone such brutalities even when (through disease of the spleen) it has led to death. We had ourselves to defend Lord Salisbury for taking the side of the native in such a case, when many Liberals cried out against him, and wanted to set up in India a government free from home control. Now, the best security for justice to the native is the introduction of the native magistrate.

That Anglo-Indian opinion, under the circumstances, is against it need surprise no one; but we are not bound to bow to it.

["CHELTENHAM LOOKER-ON."]

THE Pæan with which the Liberal Press, last Saturday, welcomed the Reuter's telegram from Simla announcing that the official opinions collected throughout India on the policy of the Government Bill introduced by Mr. Ilbert, for regulating the procedure of its Criminal Courts were 114 in favour of the measure, with only twenty-six against it, was ruthlessly silenced on Monday by the publication, in the Times, of an exhaustive analysis of those opinions, as then just published in a volume of 500 pages, issued as a supplement to the Official Gazette, from which it transpired that, instead of there being, as stated above, 114 opinions in favour, and only twenty-six against the adoption of the Bill, the very opposite was the case, 173 recommending its withdrawal absolutely, thirty recommending a compromise, and only thirteen approving the policy which it affirmed.

This enormous discrepancy between the two versions was instinctively felt by the agents of Reuter's Company, who were responsible for the first, to demand explanations; and they, accordingly, immediately telegraphed to their Indian correspondent on the subject. To this they received for reply that, "a serious error had occurred in the transmission of the telegram over the wires," the figures actually sent, instead of being 114 in favour, and twenty-six against the Bill, were 114 approving, and 206 opposed to its adoption.

Thus corroborated, it may be accepted as a fact that an overwhelming majority of those whose official position and experience qualify them to pronounce on the measures best adapted to govern the various races, and secure the stability of our Indian Empire, have declared themselves opposed to the policy of subjecting Europeans to be tried and sentenced by native magistrates, instead of, as hitherto, by their own countrymen.

That this policy should have been received with favour by the Government at home will surprise no one; so completely is it in accordance with that which dictated the inglorious termination of the Afghan War, and the craven and humiliating abandonment of the Transvaal, deserting friends who had served their country loyally in seasons of peril, and subjecting them to the rule of those with whom they have been at war. But not only has the Ilbert Bill been condemned by the men most competent to estimate its consequences; civilians, capitalists, and merchants of every class have been equally outspoken with reference to it, holding public meetings in all the chief stations of the Empire, calling upon the Government to withdraw the obnoxious measure, in justice to those upon whom only it can safely rely for counsel and support in maintaining its authority and not wantonly subject them to be brought before prejudiced tribunals for every petty offence which the native mind, biased by the principles of a hostile religion, might construe into a crime.

["SATURDAY REVIEW."]

ANOTHER discreditable episode has lent additional gloom to the history of a measure whose career has from the outset been one of blunder and disgrace. It is unnecessary and profitless to speculate as to the process by which, in the course of its journey from Simla, the figures of a telegraphic summary were so falsified as to present in a striking form the exact opposite of the true purport of the message. It would be absurd, of course, to attribute to Lord Ripon or his colleagues any sort of responsibility for a proceeding which, if a fraud, would be one of the stupidest and most short-sighted frauds on record. That such a suspicion should be possible is a disagreeable symptom of the degree to which public confidence in the fairness of the supporters of the measure has been shaken. From first to last the bitterness incidental to an unpopular change has been aggravated by the impression that the means adopted for its introduction were of a character more appropriate to an eager party fight than to the dispassionate, dignified, and cautious deliberations of an Indian Viceroy. Sir Ashley Eden's original suggestion that the expediency of a change should, on some future occasion and at a fitting moment, be considered, was used as a pretext for immediate action, and an effort was made, contrary to his clearly indicated opinion, to get the Bill passed soon enough to allow of its coming into operation simultaneously with the new Code of Criminal Procedure, at the beginning of the current year. The letter which conveyed this proposal from the Government of India to the Secretary of State was lamentably disingenuous in its suppressions and one-sidedness. It omitted altogether the important fact that the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, the Presidency in which alone the measure would have practical operation, was strongly opposed to the projected change. This omission was the more extraordinary inasmuch as the Lieutenant Governor had only a few months before, as a member of the Indian Government, joined with the then legal member of Council in resisting and defeating a still larger project of reform in the same direction, which the Viceroy at that time was anxious to introduce. The letter relied strongly on the opinions of the Local Governments, and those opinions, again, had been most unfairly obtained on a statement of the proceedings in 1872, in which the arguments then urged against the policy now to be enforced were altogether omitted. In those proceedings Mr. Justice Stephen gave, in a few sentences of masterly common sense, the reasons which had led him, the Committee to which the Bill had been referred, and the European community whose feelings on the subject had been tested, to believe that the law as then passed, and as it has stood ever since, was one with which Europeans might be content, and of which no native had any reasonable cause for complaining. Nothing that has been written or said in the long controversy on the subject that has raged ever since last March has met the manly and courageous logic of Sir James Stephen's speech. No reference, however, was made in the Government of India's circular to that speech, though the speeches on the other side of the question were set out at length. The views of the Local Governments were, in short, obtained upon a statement of fact and argument which, though excusable in an advocate, was altogether unworthy of the head of a great Empire taking counsel with subordinate rulers on a difficult and dangerous question of policy.

The unfairness in stating the question was aggravated by an emphatic intimation of the opinion at which the Government had already arrived, and full advantage was thus taken of the natural, and perhaps excusable anxiety of subordinate administrations not to thwart the policy of the paramount authority. Then came the famous debate of last March, and the foolish and monstrous attempt, by means of a misleading telegram despatched and paid for by the Indian Government, to conceal from the English public the true nature of the disastrous repulse which the advocates of the Bill had sustained, and of the calm, weighty, and well-considered opposition by which its further progress would be resisted. Lord Ripon covered his retreat from that calamitous encounter with the assurance that the opinions of officials should be ascertained and carefully considered by the Government. Those opinions have been, in many instances, for months past in the possession of the Government; but, contrary to the usual course, they have been kept back from the press; and public opinion in England accordingly has been left without any authoritative explanation of the grounds on which the measure is resisted. These opinions are now opportunely allowed to see the light at a moment when, as Lord Hartington so feelingly pointed out the other day at Sheffield, the scourge of Parliamentary interrogation is for the moment in abeyance. Lastly, and more egregiously unfair than all that has gone before, has come the Simla telegram, which, appearing last Saturday morning, left the English public for a couple of days under the impression that the official supporters of the measure in India outnumbered its opponents by four to one, and that in this triumphant majority were to be found the Governors of Madras and Bombay, the Lieutenant Governors of the North Western Provinces and of the Punjab, the Chief Commissioners of Burma and the Central Provinces, and a majority of the Judges of the High Courts other than that of Bengal.

Whatever other details of this transaction may be in darkness, it is at any rate certain that the information on which this telegram was based must have been obtained from a Government official, and that official no Ministerial subordinate, but one with the power and opportunity for estimating the total results and the grounds on which, speaking generally, the various opinions were based. We leave aside the question of figures. We have no intention of guessing as to the fraud or negligence by which the figures 205 were transformed into twenty-six, and a total of 140 constructed on figures which, according to Messrs. Reuters own showing, must have made an aggregate of 319. Looking, however, at the general drift of the telegram, we feel constrained to condemn it as misleading to an extent that is absolutely mendacious. Its assertion that the Governors of Madras and Bombay and various Lieutenant-Governors and Chief Commissioners "approve the Bill" is, to all intents and purposes, an untruth. So far from approving it, these high officials suggest in every instance radical qualifications which rob the measure of its essential qualities, and violate the principles on which it professes to be based. The Governor of Madras, while deprecating on general grounds the withdrawal of a measure with which the Government is so closely identified, would confine its operation to "covenanted civilians"—that is, to the handful of natives who have passed the competitive examination, a class which has been officially described as "small and dwindling," and which has actually in Bengal received no single recruit for several years past. His colleague, Sir F. Roberts, is so far from approving the principle of the Bill that he is actually prepared to prohibit, for the present, any further enrolment of natives in the Covenanted Civil Service. The Governor of Bombay would qualify the Bill by limiting its provisions to sessions and district judges, and giving every European the right to claim a jury. Even the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab—whose subservient precipitancy in adopting the Viceroy's schemes contrasts unfavourably with the manly independence and statesmanship of a long list of distinguished predecessors—qualifies his acceptance of the Bill by imposing in the case of native officials a long period of probation and several strict tests from which European officers are exempt. The Lieutenant Governor of the North West Provinces would restrict the proposed concession to the district magistrate; and as there will certainly be no native magistrate of the district in that province for many years to come, his recommendation is a polite form of postponing the measure to the Greek Calends. In like manner the reasons given by the Chief Commissioners of Burmah and the Central Provinces for their partial adherence to the measure are an undisguised admission that the Bill upon which their opinion was invited is wholly indefensible. To come to another class of authorities, the Chief Justices of Madras and Allahabad give but a guarded assent to the least offensive portions of the proposed Bill; while the acting Chief Justice of Bombay concurs with the Chief Justice of Bengal and the entire European Bench of the Calcutta High Court in condemning it altogether. No single supporter of the measure, so far as our information at present goes, is prepared to support it in its integrity, or in any form in which it will meet the objects and carry out the principles on which its introduction was based.

As we descend in the official hierarchy, and come to a class of officials who have practical acquaintance with the subject-matter of the dispute, we find a still more overwhelming preponderance of opinion adverse to the measure. It is significant that nearly a third of the native answers are in favour of withdrawal, and that so high an authority as Sir Madava Rao recommends that the attempt to pass the Bill should not, in the existing state of public opinion, be continued. The grounds on which the vast consensus of official opinion rests are familiar to all who have paid the least attention to Indian politics, and have been frequently discussed in these columns. We do not propose to renew the consideration of them on the present occasion. The supporters of the Bill in this country will now have an opportunity of exchanging the rhetoric of Radical platforms for the weighty arguments of men who—whatever their other disqualifications for controversy—have an intimate acquaintance with the various bearings of the matter in hand, and a life-long experience of the races and classes whom it concerns. Surely even Mr. Bright in his soberer moments must hesitate when he finds himself advocating a change for which no one but a few pretentious persons has asked—which, confessedly, will not improve the administration of justice in any single particular, and which the entire body of his fellow-countrymen unite in condemning as unnecessary and impolitic. Nothing is more unmistakable than the indifference or active dislike exhibited by the great mass of the natives to a change which, while it will do them no practical good, will gratify the vanity of a class for which they have no particular esteem, at the price of the good will and harmony on which they know full well that the general welfare essentially depends. Lord Ripon, at the outset, believed himself to be acting with the concurrence of the official class and in the interest of the native community. Under this idea he has broken up the tranquillity which many years of good government had produced, and resuscitated passions and prejudices which were far on the high road to oblivion; he has hopelessly alienated the great European community by whose co-operation the development of the country is being brought about; he has roused a noisy and excitable class into turbulence; he has left the angriest controversy ever known in India to gather strength and violence through six months of expectation. He now knows the completeness of his mistake and the serious effects of injudicious meddling; and he will, unless he wishes to signalise his Viceroyalty by a crime as well as a blunder withdraw from a position which, however reluctant he may be to admit it, he must now be convinced by every form of argument which can influence a reasonable man to be untenable.

["STATIST."]

A very pretty little controversy has grown out of the publication in India of the official opinions upon the Ilbert Bill. Reuter's Agency transmitted to this country a telegram giving an analysis of a bulky supplement of 500 pages to the Gazette, and did it so early as to create a strong suspicion that the figures had been got in advance from some official source. Unhappily, they were altogether wrong; more unhappily still, they were wrong in the way most agreeable to the Indian Government; and most unfortunately of all, the mistake irresistibly recalled a recent case in which a garbled account of what happened in the Indian Council was supplied admittedly by the Indian Government to the same obliging agency. The figures were given as 114 for and twenty-six against the Ilbert Bill. It was then explained that Reuter's agent meant to send 205, which was altered to twenty-six in transmission. This would have been more satisfactory, but for the fact that the sum of the two numbers was given in the telegram as 140; which agrees very well with 114 plus twenty-six, but does not represent the total of 114 plus 205. This little peculiarity being pointed out by unkind critics, Reuter's Secretary has further explained that the total of 140 was the result of an arithmetical effort on the part of the gentleman who "edited" the telegram in this country. It is rather a pity that the explanation has thus been dragged out piece-meal, because it leaves room for the uncharitable to sneer at it as altogether an after-thought. Nor is the matter much mended by the zeal of an evening newspaper, which tells us that it went to the expense of telegraphing to India an inquiry as to the origin of the figures, and vouches for the authority of a reply stating that the Government of India knew nothing about them. Nobody supposed that it did. Nobody every knew of a case in which any Government knew anything about the giving of any information which it was not convenient to acknowledge. When a zealous official sends useful information to a telegraphic agency, he does not call a Cabinet Council and get a formal resolution sanctioning his proceeding. No, he does good by stealth, and then all his friends, individually and collectively, can affirm upon their conscience that they had nothing to do with the matter. What a simple innocent that evening contemporary of ours must be!

All this fuss and moral indignation come in very usefully, however, to distract people's attention from the main point, which is that an overwhelming majority of European officials in India are dead against the Ilbert Bill, and that an overwhelming majority of those who do not go entirely against it advocate compromises and restrictions which practically reduce it to nullity. Even of native officials, a very large number are either against the Bill, or doubtfully in its favour, and when we consider how a native who dares to show this independence is abused by native papers, and how he winces under the infliction, these adverse opinions become very remarkable. In Bengal and Assam, the provinces more particularly affected by the Bill, there is not one single European official, from the highest to the lowest, who does not condemn it. The opinion of non-official Europeans, who are the men upon whom the material prosperity of India depends, has been abundantly shown to be unanimously against the measure. The wise and manly course is to admit that a serious blunder has been made, and to withdraw the Bill absolutely. It seems, however, that with the obstinacy usually found in combination with weakness, Lord Ripon means to stick to his measure in name, while paring it down in fact to a miserable compromise, which retains all that is offensive to Englishmen, and gives nothing that can really satisfy natives. Its operation is to be confined to native district magistrates and sessions judges. But these posts are filled up from the Government Civil Service, and natives have almost ceased to enter that service, finding it easier and cheaper to get appointments under a statute which exempts them from the competition which is thought indispensable for Englishmen. Thus the Bill will apply only to a small and dwindling class of Bengalis, wealthy enough to come to this country for their education. This is supposed to be hated by the heterogeneous races of India, many of whom justly despise the Bengalee, as a sullen and obnoxious. It is mere mockery, regarded as a means of carrying out the grand philanthropic schemes pronounced by Lord Ripon. Yet it affirms a mischievous principle, and opens the door for a troublesome agitation, besides embittering the relations between races, and stirring up animosities which were quietly dying out.

["ST. STEPHEN'S REVIEW."]

It is fortunate that the Caucus does not prevail in India. When Mr. Chamberlain, under the title of the Marquis of Kimergham, or the Earl of Caucus, shall be the Viceroy, then probably the Union system by which opinion has been so diligently organised in England will flourish in Bengal and the contiguous presidencies. That the Indian Government has done its best to bring Indian provincial authorities to a due sense of the virtue of Lord Ripon's policy is obvious. They, nevertheless, will "not listen to the voice of the charmer, charm she ever so wisely." Lord Ripon had determined that the Ilbert Bill should be forced upon the Anglo-Indian residents in defiance of the history of India, in defiance of the obligations of English prestige, and in defiance of the logic of facts, and to that end did his best to secure a favourable opinion from the officials in India in support of the measure. No Government project has ever been greeted with the same reprobation. A feeling of intense indignation has issued from the lips of nearly every great Indian authority, while European residents in India and Anglo-Indians in England have denounced the proposed Bill in terms of unqualified censure. Twice lately have great gatherings of merchants and planters solemnly bound themselves to repudiate the Bill, should attempts be made to force the action of its provisions upon them. In fact, practically, the whole of England in India and in Great Britain has by every possible means asserted that, should the measure be put into operation, the beginning of the end of British rule will be precipitated.

Lord Ripon is as great a theorist as he is a casuist. The temper of mind which perverted him from Protestantism to Romanism may be laudible, but it evidences that his reasoning travels in a groove essentially narrow. He cares more for dogma than a great principle. He is the representative of a tone of political thought which was exemplified in the time of the French Revolution, and is now exemplified by the English Radical party. The Radical sets up certain ideas and asserts they are beyond dispute. He takes no count of human nature, and shows no perception with respect to race, its diverse creeds, tempers, and characters. Having once settled upon a plan, the Radical asserts that, in deference to his principle, the very order of nature, if needs be, must be inverted. This is what is being done by Lord Ripon. It is proposed to alter all the existing relationships between the Native Indians and the Anglo-Indians and bring them under a law administered by common tribunals, under at least the partial, if not sole, presidency of native judges. The subject race is known to be not only inferior to that of the English, but is acknowledged to be lacking in those qualities of veracity and honour which are significant attributes of their rulers. The introduction of the Ilbert Bill demonstrated how the principles of Clive, Warren, Hastings, Lawrence, Mayo, and even of Canning were to be ignored, and those of a doctrinaire Radical school were to be asserted at the cost of creating a feeling of the bitterest discontent throughout India on the part of those who hold it, yet without securing any visible appreciation from the subject people themselves. When the telegraph, on Friday, flashed from Simla the news that out of 140 opinions 114 were in favour of the rash measure, and only twenty-six against it, it is needless to say that all who had the welfare of our great Eastern Dependency at heart were astounded. Absolute consternation reigned in the breasts of nearly every Anglo-Indian in London and elsewhere who read this most ominous telegram—a telegram be it said which came apparently from the seat of information—the Indian Government itself. However, all is not gold that glitters. This brilliant statement, which was as a crown of glory to Lord Ripon, turns out to be as mendacious as his policy is pernicious and abortive. This lying telegram is the last of a procession of events each of which is a disgrace to the Gladstone Government, and a denial of their fitness for the possession of power. In every part of the world they have substituted sentimentalism for hard common sense, vacillation for a firm policy, and a craven compliance with Radical doctrines for a dignified system of rule on the part of a nation which should command respect through its consistency, integrity, and resolution, to be faithful to its grand traditions.

Never has a Government, through its own officials, received a greater rebuke than is witnessed in the collective judgments of the Indian Provinces and Districts. These are represented by 222 official reports. Of these only thirteen are in favour of the Ilbert Bill, while thirty-six suggest a compromise; the balance, 173, being diametrically opposed to the measure, and urging its total withdrawal. Estimating the dominating influence of the Government, and the natural tendency in the official mind to conciliate those in authority, the repugnance to the Ripon policy must be indeed inveterate. It is difficult to realise that only thirteen reports have testified approval of the Ilbert Bill, the more so when it is realised that those from whom they emanate have everything to gain by coming to the aid of the Indian Council in its hour of extreme need. The cup of Lord Ripon is now full—full to the brim. This last drop must be as gill to him and his Council. What he will next do it is impossible to predict. He appears unable to accept the verdict of his own countrymen, a failing significantly shared by the members of the Government at home. Lord Ripon in India and Mr. Gladstone in England are worthy of each other. They desire to give expression to a number of superfine theories, all of which are, according to their argument, said to bring about peace, prosperity, and contentment. Hitherto, of late especially, facts have testified to the fallacy of these ideas—ideas which suggest change at the cost of stability, ideas which move the imagination of the foolish crowd to great expectations never to be satisfied, and create a craving for experiment in the end too often the cause of confusion and indignation in every part of the Empire where a Government, not of hazard, but of consistency, honesty, honour, consideration, and caution is appreciated.

THE "DAILY NEWS" ON ANGLO-INDIAN NON-OFFICIALS.

No Englishman in high administrative position has been the object of a coarser and more wanton attack than that which has been made on the Governor General of India within the last day or two. The Viceroy of India, or his private secretary—it does not matter which—has been deliberately accused of having falsified the figures which represent the Indian opinions for and against the Ilbert Bill, and which were communicated by a well-known telegraphic agency, at the end of last week, to this journal among others. According to the telegram published on Saturday by all the morning papers there were 114 opinions for the Bill and twenty-six against it. Since that date the secretary to the agency in question has explained that a mistake had occurred in transmission, and that the real figures were 114 in "favour of and 205 against the principle and policy of the Bill, both including European and native officials and non-officials." Following this correction comes a telegram in answer to one which the Pall Mall Gazette yesterday despatched to India. It states that the Indian Government is "entirely ignorant" of the message in which the facts had been mis-stated. The reply further states that "advance copies" of the printed statements of opinions had been distributed to the Indian papers on Friday—that is to say, on the very day on which the supposed deliberate falsehood had been telegraphed to England. It was hardly needful to ask this question, since only persons blinded by partisanship would for a moment believe the Indian Government to be guilty of so short-sighted a policy. Unhappily it is this partisanship—made up of defective imagination and prejudice of race—which has at all times been the chief impediment to the progressive influence of England in her Eastern Empire, and will continue to be so while the Empire lasts. Has it occurred to these blind partisans that, by publishing urbi et orbi their impression that the responsible rulers of India have been deliberately lying, they are doing more mischief to England than can possibly be effected by a score of Bills such as the Ilbert Bill, which they denounce? The word "non-officials," used above, is of much importance in this controversy to English prestige in Asia. The Viceroy has consulted the European non-officials, as well as European officials. He was bound to consult the latter, but not the former. He must have known very well what the non-official verdict would be—that it would be hostile to him. However, in deference to a practice which he has more literally encouraged than any of his predecessors, he has subjected the Ilbert proposals to the opinion of the non-official population of Europeans in India. But let not the English public be deceived in their estimate of the political importance of the "non-official."

People are apt to suppose that the non-official English population in India possess in Indian politics an influence similar to that which their countrymen at home exercise upon the Government here. No estimate could be more wide of the mark. The non-official Europeans in India are a mere handful amidst a population of two hundred millions. It is not directly for their interest that we govern India; we govern it for the direct interest of the two hundred millions. The non-official English are not responsible for the good government of India, as the non-officials at home—that is to say, the whole mass of the inhabitants of the British Isles—are responsible for the conduct of Mr. Gladstone and his Cabinet. Nor again are the Governor General and his Council accountable for their actions to the non-official European community in the same way as an English Cabinet is accountable to the nation. The Viceroy is accountable, not to Anglo-India, but to Native India, to the Ministers at Westminster, and ultimately—when some great and vital principle is at stake—to the English people. The "non-officials"—the merchants, bankers, shopkeepers, indigo planters, tea-growers, railway men, in a word, all those who are not servants of the Government—are "interlopers" in the political sense, just as under the Company's rule they were "interlopers" in the commercial sense. An understanding of this plain fact might help even the Viceroy's opponents in England to remove from the question at issue a good deal of the nonsense which has obscured it. The English rule India for the Indians. We are not saying that non-official interests in India should not be considered. Far from it. We only say that they are secondary, but that, though secondary, they are sure to prosper under any Government by which native India prospers. And do they not prosper? In spite of the fact that, except on the emergence of a question in which, like the present, effects a mere sentiment, the European "non-official" cares no more for the politics of India than for the politics of Mars. His backers on the platform and in the Press threaten that if native judges of proved capacity and unimpeachable honour are empowered to try his fellow Europeans on a criminal charge, he will withdraw himself and his capital from the country. We shall see. If the Ilbert Bill pass to-morrow, he will still go on pushing wherever he can turn a penny, and interspersing his maledictions of the climate with complacent remarks upon a providential outlet for over-crowded England. Here, then, are the three salient points which Englishmen at home must steadily bear in mind if they mean to decide impartially between the Governor-General and the handful of noisy agitators in Bengal and Assam. Firstly, the natives in whose interest we govern India ask for the proposed alteration in the law; secondly, the majority of the highest English officials in India are willing to accept the principle at stake; thirdly, most of those who refuse the principle are the non-official Europeans, who have not won the "brightest jewel" in the English crown, who have only one engrossing care in India—the care of making money, and of going home when they have made it, who have nothing to do with the Government of India, who have no right to call upon the Government for an account of its stewardship; to whom the Government of India has no direct political relationship—such as it has with the native population—and to whom the same Government never was, nor is now, bound to account for its policy.

Having set off the officials against the non-officials—that is, the rulers against their fellow-countrymen who do not rule—we must now point to a most important difference of opinion among the rulers themselves. As soon as it appeared that there were more officials against the Bill than for it, the obstructives raised a cry of triumphant delight. Anybody could have predicted that if you consulted all the officials, great and small, important and unimportant, the balance of enumerated opinions would be against the Viceroy. Officials below a certain scale of rank and education are as illiberal and as open to small jealousies as any non-official persons. But suppose that instead of counting the votes we weigh them. If we do this we shall find that the weightiest authorities in India—the Governors of provinces each as large as England or France, the Judges of the chief courts—agree to accept the proposal that native civilians of the competitive service who have attained the rank of district magistrate or of sessions judge, shall be invested with the same criminal powers which are enjoyed by their English fellow-civilians of those grades. It says much for the Ilbert Bill that the first English competitive civilian who has risen to the governorship of a great province signifies his thorough approval of the proposed measure; and the support of the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab should surely outweigh the opposition of the chiefs of such petty administrations as Ajmere and Coorg. The other of the two ablest and most accomplished of English civilians—Sir Alfred Lyall Lieutenant-Governor of the North Western Provinces, is another of the high authorities who are ready to adopt the principle of the Bill. The same may be said of most of the highest civil officers, executive and legislative, in the Bombay and Madras Presidencies, and of the Chief Commissioner of Burma. "Coorg" and the Punjab, or the Madras Presidency, may be called by the same name of Administrations, but the first is to the other two, as the county of Rutland to the whole of England. If the Viceroy had consulted the highest officials only, most of whom have risen through every grade in the service, the Ilbert Bill might have become law without exciting in the non-official breast any sentiment more serious than a nine days' wonder. But he need not be discouraged. Legislative reforms have aroused fanatical opposition in India before now; but have survived, and the obstructives have gone on accumulating capital. And so they will, in spite of all their threats to "clear out;" and long after the Ilbert clauses have been incorporated into the Code.

THE INDIAN PRESS ON THE SUBJECT. THE "FRIEND OF INDIA" ON THE NATIVE JURISDICTION BILL.

WE do hope that the kindly tone in which speaker after speaker, at the great meeting of the Anglo-Indian Defence Association, on Monday, expressed himself concerning the native community, will be responded to as it should be by the native press. It is with deep pain that we have watched the progress of this quarrel, and observed the bitterness of the language that has been employed therein. The native press will make a lamentable mistake if it does not meet the European community more than half-way in this return to kindly and respectful feeling. When Mr. Keswick, in simple and dignified language, tells the native community that the opponents of this measure feel themselves "unjustly accused of want of sympathy with their native fellow-subject," we believe him to be speaking truthfully, and the native community and native press must respond in the right tone to these expressions of goodwill. Again, when Mr. A. B. Miller says, "I am not here to-day to say one single harsh word against our native fellow-subject," and when he affirms that "many respectable members of the native community to some extent sympathise with" the European protest, he is saying what is true, and the native press must show an honourable readiness to meet such expressions in the right spirit. The editor of this journal is the only publicist probably in the country who was editing a paper during the troubled period of the Mutiny, and he has had more experience of these "race" quarrels than any journalist living, having passed through the darkest and most deadly of them all. Then, as now, a torrent of feeling spent itself in the press, to be recalled afterwards as a night-mare of the past. The most welcome praise that he ever received in his journalistic life was the public testimony of all classes, after the fiery ordeal was over, that he had striven "to maintain a kindly feeling between all classes" and to promote "cordial and mutual respect and regard between both natives and Europeans, so closely brought together in Divine Providence." (Rev. John Wilson, Bombay, 1864.) There is but one touchstone, we are satisfied, at this moment, of wise and healthful writing and speaking on this Ilbert Bill. Every word that tends to widen the breach between the communities, is an unhealthy, an unwelcome, an unpatriotic word. The controversy was long since exhausted, and there is no new light to be thrown upon it. We would gladly have kept silence on the subject altogether, if we could have done so; but as that is impossible, we shall say as little as we can. Meanwhile, let the Native press respond properly to the kindly sentiments of the speakers at Monday's meeting.

It is one of the most unfortunate peculiarities of this quarrel, that neither party will give the other credit for being actuated by any but unworthy motives. Thus the native press insist that the opposition which has been raised to the Bill arises from mere prejudice against the people, on the ground of difference of race. Englishmen object, they say, to be tried on criminal charges by native judges, simply because they are natives. They have no fear of the native magistrate being incompetent, or prejudiced against them, still less of his being corrupt or wilfully unjust. They object to the native, simply because he is a native; and because Englishmen regard the being compelled to appear before a native magistrate, as a degradation.

No one, of course, would be so careless of truth as to affirm that race prejudice has not played a very prominent part in the opposition which the Bill has met with; but equally removed is it from the truth to affirm that, having said this, we have said all. There is a very large amount of honest opposition to the Bill, and it is on this part of it, that a wise publicist would concentrate his attention. Sir Stuart Bayley seems to have stated, with great clearness, the real situation, in the course of the debate in Council in last March:—

"There are two aspects from which the Bill is assailed. One is that native gentlemen, no matter what their qualification, must be taught to remember that they are of a subject race, and as such unfit to try any members of the dominant race. On this argument I am unwilling to dwell. It has been developed into what our American cousins call 'spread-eagleism.' I have absolutely no sympathy with it, and the frequent recourse to such an argument is not creditable to our national character. But there is another aspect to the case of the opposition which I think deserves most attentive consideration, and this is the real danger in which the isolated European, living in the Mofussil, runs from having false cases trumped up against him. It is right that I should state publicly that this danger is a very real and very serious one, for probably no member of this Council has had the same experience as I have of the lives led by planters in the Mofussil. My own experience has given me a strong feeling on this matter, and any one who knows the extreme bitterness with which disputes about land are fought out in the Mofussil and unsavoury methods to which recourse is had in conducting these disputes before the Court—methods to which a planter cannot have recourse, will understand how precarious his position may become and how essential to him it is that the law should be well and wisely administered."

This passage in Sir S. Bayley's speech has been commented on in the Press before, but attention has not, we think, been hitherto directed to another passage therein, which seems to ourselves of at least equal importance, and we recommend everyone to read it attentively. He says with great frankness:—

"I confess that I failed to foresee either the extent or the depth of feeling which the measure has aroused amongst the European population, and it is only fair to add that I think the Viceroy had a clear right to expect from the local Governments, or in regard to Bengal from myself, a more decided warning than he received, of the spirit which the proposal would arouse. Looking at the evil effects which have ensued, and must ensue, from the agitation going on, I cannot but deeply regret that I failed to gauge accurately the feelings of the great body of my countrymen, and of even my many personal friends amongst the planting community."

From the very first notice of this Bill which fell under our own eyes, it was this failure which Sir Steuart Bayley thus ingenuously confesses, that chiefly impressed our mind. For what purpose is the Viceroy surrounded by a highly-paid staff of councillors and secretaries, but to inform him of the difficulties which attend legislation in India? There was not a civilian member of the Supreme Government who ought not to have known instinctively the agitation which such a Bill as this would produce. Not only was the Viceroy unwarned, but no attempt of any kind seems to have been made to consult the Chambers of Commerce, or any of the great representative associations, which exist in the country, as to the feelings with which the measure would be received. The Bill was a complete surprise, and was thrown upon the Council table, with no more caution or preparation of the public mind for it, than if it had been a Bill for regulating the excise.

Now, it is observable that not only does Sir Steuart Bayley declare plainly "from his long experience" that "isolated Europeans living in the Mofussil are in real danger" from having false charges trumped up against them, but Dr. Hunter, who is a supporter of the Bill himself, writes in his book on Indian Mussulmans as follows:—

"The Bengali, whether rich or poor, wreaks his malice on a rival, and seeks his revenge against an enemy, not by inconsiderate violence, but by due course of law. He uses the courts for the same purpose for which an Englishman employs a horse-whip, or a Californian his bowie-knife. A criminal prosecution is the correct form for inflicting personal chastisement, and a general suspension in India of what corresponds to the Habeas Corpus Act would place every man at the mercy of his enemies. The police returns in India disclose an overwhelming proportion of false complaints to true ones, and the Bengali has reduced the rather perilous business of making out a prima facie case to an exact science. A formal interference with the right of habeas corpus would give the signal for a paroxysm of perjury. The innocent would live in constant fear of being thrown into prison and kept there on false charges of treason; the revengeful and malicious would enjoy a perpetual triumph."

Dr. Hunter here says positively, that the people systematically resort to false charges in the courts against those whom they would injure; that there is an overwhelming proportion of false complaints to true ones in the courts; and that perilous as the business is, the people have by their ingenuity reduced the practice of trumping up such cases to an exact science." And Sir Steuart Bayley affirms that the isolated European of the Mofussil "runs a very real and very serious danger" of having such charges preferred against him; and that his own experience has given him a very strong feeling on this matter. The danger therefore which the non-official Englishman runs in remote Mofussil districts, is thus declared by almost the highest executive authority that can be adduced, to be no fanciful danger, but a real one; not a trivial danger, but a most serious one. How strangely wanting, then, is it in candour, to describe the agitation against this Bill as springing from nothing but a determination to make slaves of the people, and to resist all measures for their well-being and advancement? If it were even true that the opposition to this Bill arose entirely from race prejudice, it would be unwise to insist upon a fact so lamentable in itself and pregnant with evil. But when we are told that it is not true, and that though the alarm may be exaggerated the danger which excites it is a real danger, and in the judgment of so great an authority as Sir Steuart Bayley a very serious danger, true wisdom and right feeling demand that the agitation against the measure should be treated with respect. It is a serious disadvantage to Anglo-Indian publicists that, as a rule, they know very little of Mofussil life. It is a sealed book to them. We know very little of it ourselves, but we know enough to feel reasonably sure that what Sir Steuart Bayley has affirmed is true. And if it is true, the publicist must be wanting in imagination or in sympathy, who has any difficulty in understanding the true state of English feeling towards the Bill. Constituted as human nature is, and particularly the human nature of a masterful race like the English, the mere thought of a wife, sister, or daughter being summoned without resource to a police-court, before a strange native magistrate, to answer a false charge, is unendurable, the sense of the degradation and outrage probably exceeding the sense of danger altogether. For ourselves, we are disposed to believe that any danger which the isolated Englishman or woman might run in such circumstances, would be minimised by the magistrate being a native. It is only reasonable, we think, to believe so, because of the great advantages which the native judge possesses in administering justice in the courts of original instance. His knowledge of the people, of their language, their social life, their thoughts, their ways, give the native judge so great an advantage over the civilian, in sifting and weighing evidence, while such honourable testimony has been borne for years past to his integrity by the High Court Judges of Calcutta, that we do seriously believe the isolated European would be better protected by a native magistrate, or judge, in most cases, than by an ordinary civilian magistrate. And for ourselves, we say, that in view of the testimony borne within the last ten years by our High Court judges, to the ability and integrity of the native judges of the lower provinces, we should deem ourselves under better protection against a trumped-up charge, before a native magistrate of character, than we should before an English one, simply because the one must have a clearer insight into the proceedings before him than the other. But it would probably be found, on inquiry, that not one Englishman in twenty felt as we should, under such circumstances. Where there is no race feeling, the judgment is necessarily calmer, but the Legislature has to deal with two communities, in which this race feeling is a great factor in the administration of affairs; and the opposition to this measure is so universal, so pronounced, and has so much basis of fact to rest upon as we have seen, that it ought never to have been brought forward in its present shape. It confers nothing upon the people, while it takes from the Englishman what he greatly prizes, and what he deems essential to his safety in the mofussil. The Press has been so unwisely conducted, that it has become a point of honour on the part of the native Press to insist upon the Bill pure and simple; on the part of the English Press and community, to reject it altogether. We do not think that it ought to be so rejected, for it would be to pass a most undeserved stigma upon native gentlemen like Mr. Gupta, who by their abilities and character have forced their way into the Civil Service, as our own youth are doing, to decline to admit their claim to the full powers which belong to the ordinary English civilian. And there the Bill should stop, in our judgment, and we believe that it is an impartial one.

THE "PIONEER" ON THE VICEROY'S DILEMMA.

The forces of agitation exerted from opposite directions have hitherto kept the Government of India in equilibrium. The patrons of the Ilbert Bill are between Scylla and Charybdis. If they withdraw it, they concede to European agitation, just as the Home Government have lately thrown over their Suez Canal arrangements in deference to popular agitation. If they proceed, they yield to the agitation of the Native Press and of the noisiest section of the people. It is important to bear this in mind, because there is a party in England who represent the agitation as wholly on one side. The real fact is that, whichever way Lord Ripon turns, he must yield to agitation of some sort. Had he made up his mind what to do in March last, agitation from one quarter would have been anticipated and disarmed. But he delayed and, as was predicted, left India to simmer. The clouds have since then gathered on all sides, and agitation has to be reckoned with from some quarter or another, no matter in what direction the Government of India may drift. Under these circumstances there is a choice of evils. The Viceroy must surrender, and the question to whom he should surrender can only be determined by a careful consideration of the relative forces against him, and of the justice of their cause. The rights of the agitation are the only basis upon which the policy of Government can now be safely laid. We see that the English Press is disposed rather to look at the strength than at the rights or wrongs of the two opposing forces. They argue, with reason, that, constituted as the Government of India is, it would be sheer madness to defy European opinion, and thus isolate the Administration from the only force upon which it can rely. The argument is sound enough, but somewhat brutal. The case for the European is too strong on its merits, and from the standpoint of justice, to make it necessary for the opposition to shift its ground and take up a position in rear of its present outworks. The present state of affairs is this. The Government are between two agitations, and without inquiring which is backed by the stronger force, we need only look at their respective merits. The European agitation is one organised in defence of existing rights and to prevent injustice. The native agitation is to attack rights. The former is conservative, the latter is destructive. So much for the objects in view. The European agitation commenced when rights of Europeans were attacked, and is strictly defensive. The native agitation never commenced until the Europeans were put on their guard, and is entirely directed against the Europeans. It is because the Europeans want to preserve their legal rights that the Native Press has agitated against them. The European agitation is constitutional and directed against a measure; the native agitation is against a class, and cares nothing about the measure. Until the Ilbert Bill was introduced and objected to, the Native Press never troubled itself about the jurisdiction which the law conferred on Europeans. Victory to the European means the preservation of an inherited right and the maintenance of the existing law, while victory to the Native Press means the humiliation of the European and the infliction of a penalty upon him. With all respect to Mr. Bright's age, we entirely deny that any question of justice to the native or of the Queen's Proclamation is involved in the present matter. The mass of the Indian population are entirely indifferent, if they are not in favour of the present law. The native agitation was not antecedent to the introduction of the Ilbert Bill. Its origin was due to class feeling, and it began only when the Europeans expressed their constitutional objection to the alteration in their political and legal status. The Government of India must give way to one or other of the agitations, and the choice lies between yielding to the universal demand of the European for the maintenance of the law, or to the agitation of a small section of the native community in favour of the public humiliation of the European community. No reasonable man can doubt to which side the Government can most safely concede.

THE PUNJAB VIEW OF THE BILL.

(PIONEER.)

THE Punjab Chief Court have given to the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Bill a very modified approval. The plea of administrative inconvenience will not hold water for a moment in that province. As one member of the court points out: there is no native competition civilian in the Commission; there is but one native assistant commissioner, Mahommed Hyat Khan; and there are four statutory civilians appointed within the last year or two. Thus the days when any native officers may be expected to come into the charge of districts are still remote. The officers of the court agree with Sir Charles Aitchison in considering that district magistrates at any rate should possess the proposed powers in virtue of their office; and Mr. Barkley, we believe, goes a step further in company with the Lieutenant Governor, and would confer them on any native officer who has held the position of a magistrate of the first class for seven years; but beyond this Mr. Barkley does not go, and he is distinctly opposed to the disqualification of European non-officials and deputy magistrates for the justiceship of the peace. Mr. Elmslie, again, while thinking that the powers should be conferred on all district magistrates, sees no disadvantage in withholding them from native sessions judges; and as to the rest, he is of opinion that it would be much better to wait and see what work is done by the native officers of the commission before entrusting them with criminal powers over Europeans. In short, the Punjab Chief Court's opinion of the Bill may be summed up in the words that the measure is not called for.

THE ASSAM VIEW OF THE BILL. (PIONEER.)

It has been generally known for some time past that the Chief Commissioner of Assam had come to the conclusion that his vote with regard to the Criminal Procedure Bill should be given in favour of complete withdrawal. Such an opinion, coming from a man like Mr. Elliott, whose political ideas are confessedly Liberal, and whose sympathy with the natives of the country has been conspicuous in more than words, will carry immense weight with the public, and would be enough of itself to convince the Government of the errors of the course that they are bent upon, if the ears of the Government had not long ago been closed to warning or conviction. Mr. Elliott's opinion, strong enough alone, is supported, we believe, by a really unanimous consensus on the part of the officers of the Province, every one of whom, we believe, has reported against the Bill. By widely different paths they have all arrived at the same point, and they have given a solid vote for withdrawal. As for Mr. Elliott himself, the principal ground on which he recommends the abandonment of the measure is the opposition that it has aroused. He sees nothing which would lead him to suppose that abuses are likely to arise from the native administration of criminal justice, and his experience of the working of the Civil Courts tends rather to the contrary effect; but, on the other hand, he sees nothing to be gained in the way of administrative convenience by the change proposed, and he is persuaded that real administrative inconvenience, as well as injustice, would be caused by the disqualification of the European deputy magistrates for the justiceship of the peace. On the whole, as we understand it, Mr. Elliott's attitude is one of indifference towards the arguments that have been used either for or against the measure; but the angry agitation that has sprung up amongst the Europeans he treats as a tangible, palpable fact. He believes that the indignation has gone so far that nothing short of absolute withdrawal will appease it, and accordingly he would have the Government make the full concession, as the sure and only way of repairing the mischief. It would be difficult for a less pronounced and consistent advocate of progress to state this argument so plainly as Mr. Elliott has put it; but, as we have already observed, in his mouth the advice of abandonment has a double force. It should be remembered, too, that the opinions of the Chief Commissioner and the Assam officers deserve peculiar consideration, as in no other province is the non-official European community anything like so large or so important in proportion to the whole population. The secession of the planters en masse from all participation in local and municipal business, which was so often hinted at in the indignation meetings last spring, would be a very unpleasant consequence of the passing of the Bill; and in many ways it would produce estrangement between the officials and non-officials, to the harm of both sides. Mr. Elliott and his officers have an experience of these things; which the officials of most other provinces cannot pretend to; and if the Government decision was not virtually settled long before the local reports were received, as there is too much reason to fear that it was, the Assam papers can have hardly failed to bring some doubts even to the self-satisfied minds that have charge of these affairs.

Lieut. Brownlow, Royal Warwickshire, has been removed to the 2nd Battalion.

The 10th Hussars on their departure will, leave a goodly detachment of officers behind them in this country comfortably provided for; three majors, one captain, and a subaltern are holding appointments in consequence of which they have been seconded. Major St. Quintin, senior major of the regiment, who was appointed remount agent at Calcutta on May 4 last year, will it is presumed, continue to hold it till he succeeds to the junior lieutenant colonelcy which, will be vacant in Sept. 1885 on Colonel Wood completing his four years in command. Brevet Lieutenant Colonel B. A. Combe, late of the 21st Hussars, now in the Adjutant General's Office at Simla, is not likely to rejoin till February 1888, five years from the date of his transfer from the Quartermaster General's Department. Captain S. G. Rose, aide-de-camp to the Lieutenant Governor of the North-Western Provinces, may rejoin at any time; the movements of Lord Alwyn Compton will no doubt depend on those of the Viceroy, on whose staff he now is.

Jamrood is to continue to be held as a military post, says the Lahore paper. The fort is to be armed with light field-guns, and Gatlings are also spoken of. It will be necessary to make better provision for a water supply, as the stream by which the garrison have hitherto been supplied has dried up, apparently from natural causes; and the wells will require machinery to work them, if they are to be kept sweet and wholesome.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE "FRIEND OF INDIA" ON MR. BOSWORTH SMITH AND MAJOR HODSON.

WHATEVER the character of the late Major Hodson, it is to be regretted, we think, that the biographer of Lord Lawrence should have gone out of his way to pronounce so scathing a judgment upon him. Major Hodson's brother charges Mr. Bosworth Smith with having suppressed the fact that the court of inquiry which reported upon Hodson's alleged defalcations in the regimental accounts, fully and honourably acquitted him of blame in the matter, and Lord Napier of Magdala has very explicitly confirmed their verdict. Mr. Smith essayed a reply to Hodson's brother, but took no notice of the charge that he had knowingly and wilfully suppressed, all reference to the official inquiry and its results. General Richard Lawrence now comes forward, and in a letter to the Daily News says:—

"I knew Major Hodson personally and by reputation. He was sent out by my brother, Sir Henry Lawrence, to be my assistant at Peshawur. I sent him back as soon as I could. His proceedings connected with the building of the Lawrence Asylum at Kussowlie proved to me that he was not to be trusted. I have read carefully Mr. Bosworth Smith's narrative, and I do not think that he has over-stated the case with regard to Major Hodson's career. In expressing this opinion, I know that I am fully supported by those who knew Major Hodson most intimately in the Punjab, and had the best opportunities of forming a judgment on his character."

Now, this appointment of Hodson to Peshawur must have been made while Sir Henry Lawrence was Chief Commissioner at Lahore, and if Richard Lawrence "sent him back as soon as he could," he was presumably returned upon Henry's hands, before Sir Henry left the Punjab. There must, we think, have been some difference of opinion between the brothers as to Hodson's merits; for many months after Henry had retired from the commissionership, we find him writing to Lord Hardinge (July 4, 1853) as follows:—

"The Guide Corps you raised at my request has held its ground, as the best irregular corps in India. The present commander is a young fellow, Hodson by name, whom you gave me at Lahore in 1847. He is a first-rate soldier, and as your Lordship likes young officers in command, I beg to bring him to your notice, for a brevet majority. Sir C. Napier thinks highly of him. . . . he is a most gallant fellow, and very able in all departments."

It is impossible to believe that Sir Henry Lawrence would have written thus to Lord Hardinge in 1853, of a man who, according to Mr. Bosworth Smith, was regarded by him as "dishonest," and who had been returned upon his hands by his brother, Richard Lawrence, for the same "peculiarity" at Kussowlie. We know that Henry Lawrence was magnanimity itself, but it is impossible to believe that he regarded Hodson as dishonest. We suspect that there was a difference between the brothers in their opinion of Hodson, and that Mr. Bosworth Smith has done Hodson an injustice in numbering Sir Henry amongst the men who believed in his guilt. That John did so is certain, and equally certain that Richard Lawrence still does. On the other hand the court of inquiry fully and honourably acquitted him of the charge, and Lord Napier very warmly upholds their verdict. We think Mr. Bosworth Smith might have passed the subject over altogether at this late date, Hodson having sins enough, poor fellow, to answer for, without raking up these doubtful scandals about him.

THE NATIVE PRESS ON THE NATIONAL ANTHEM FOR INDIA FUND.

["THE LIBERAL."]

WE are often asked why there should be a fund attached to the National Anthem movement? There are, indeed, many who do not understand why subscriptions should be invited for the furtherance of this cause. To answer the question we may remind the reader that the Anthem Committee intend to make a gift of the Anthem to the people of India. This is no easy task, for let Canon Harford speak. He computes the school population and the educated classes. There are 67,000 schools, colleges, &c., in India, containing nearly 2,000,000 scholars. There are again about 120,000 patshalas which contain perhaps 4,000,000 children. Besides these there are the educated classes. So that, making a rough estimate, he finds that if copies of the Anthem were distributed among them no less than 8,000,000 copies should be printed. Now supposing that printing, postage, and the other attendant expenses caused each copy to cost one penny, each separate 1,000,000 of copies would cost something over £4,166. Multiply that by 8, and you will have some idea of the gigantic enterprise taken in hand by the Anthem Committee.

Amongst the victims of the present cholera epidemic at Kamptee is Lieutenant Charles Amphlett Gardner, adjutant of the 5th Madras Native Infantry. The deceased was appointed a probationer of the Madras Staff Corps on August 6, 1879, and was first appointed to the 5th N.I. on Nov. 20, 1881.

The second annual report of the Northern Bengal Volunteer Rifle Corps shows the total strength of that body to be 296 volunteers and 45 cadets—an increase of 95 on the previous year. At the annual inspection the inspecting officer expressed his great satisfaction with regard to the efficiency of the companies.

At a recent meeting of members of the council of the United Service Institution of India, it was proposed:—"That the cordial thanks of the United Service Institution of India be given to Major A. D. Anderson, R.A., for the very able and zealous manner in which he has carried out his duties of secretary from May, 1878." Major Anderson has been succeeded as honorary secretary by Major W. E. Gowan.

LONDON TO CALCUTTA IN A WEEK.

Mr. BOURNE, C.E., the Principal of the new Engineering College at Muswell Hill, contributes to the Chamber of Commerce Journal for September an article descriptive of a proposed new junction railway intended to unite the railways of Europe with those of India, and which will so accelerate communication between the Eastern and Western worlds that by its aid we shall be enabled to travel from London to Calcutta in a week. The design of this railway is due to Sir Macdonald Stephenson, by whom the Indian system of railways was inaugurated, and who so far back as 1850 brought the project under the consideration of Lord Palmerston, and, backed by his influence, under the notice of the principal Courts of Europe, as an undertaking that must one day be proceeded with, being the necessary complement of the Indian system of railways, about that time begun. In 1847 Mr. Bourne had accompanied Sir Macdonald Stephenson to India to commence the works of the East Indian Railway—the first line constructed in India, and which has since reached a high measure of commercial success—and he has since, in conjunction with Sir Macdonald Stephenson, collected all necessary information regarding the commerce, population, productions, trade routes, topography, geological formation and mineral wealth of the countries intervening between Europe and India, so as to ascertain what were the physical difficulties which would be encountered in the construction of the proposed junction railway, and what the prospects were of remunerative return. In the prosecution of this task about five thousand volumes, bearing upon such topics, have been examined, and a thousand maps, and a line has been struck out which there is every reason to believe would be remunerative from the local traffic alone, and which is exempt from serious engineering difficulty from end to end. The European system of railways is now complete or being completed up to Constantinople. The Indian system is complete up to Sibi on the road to Candahar, and the junction link now proposed between these two points, and which would be 3,000 miles long, or of the same length as one of the railways across America, would run from Constantinople through Angora, Sivas, Van, Tabreez, Teheran, Meshed, Herat, and Candahar. The time, it is believed, has now arrived for utilising the laborious research continued during so many years. A new and a faster route to India has become necessary. Railways ramifying over the face of Europe and over the face of India have now been constructed, which will collect and distribute the traffic of the connecting trunk, and with such aids the through traffic, it is believed, will be large. Every railway in Europe and every railway in India is interested in the construction of this junction link, and measures, we are informed, are now being taken for carrying out the undertaking without further delay.

THE DISASTER TO THE "KNIGHT OF BATH."

SOME further particulars of the disaster to the Knight of Bath, steamship, were yesterday received from South Africa at Newport, whence the vessel sailed some time since. The ship was wrecked at the Kooria Moorla Islands, and the crew were supposed to have been saved. Without any delay Captain Hext ordered the Government steamer Amberwitch, which was then in Aden, to proceed in search of the crew. From that time up to yesterday nothing had been heard either of the Amberwitch or the shipwrecked crew. The Knight of Bath left Bombay on the 12th of June, with a general cargo, her destination being Havre. Nothing worth recording occurred until five days after the vessel had left the port, when a terrific storm was experienced. The wind was blowing a perfect hurricane from the south-west, under the action of which the sea was greatly disturbed, huge waves repeatedly sweeping the decks. Towards the afternoon the wind moderated to some extent, but the agitation of the water continued unabated and threatened every moment the destruction of the vessel. On the morning, June 18, land, which eventually turned out to be the Kooria Moorla Islands, was reported on the starboard bow. The captain immediately adopted measures, so far as he was able, to guard against the peril which was now imminent. By the compass it was found that the bearing of the islands was west-half north, and on reference being made to a chart it was discovered that there were sunken rocks on the same line of bearing. No time was now to be lost, for the danger was even greater than had been apprehended. Everything that skilful navigation and good seamanship could suggest, and the circumstances would permit, was done to save the vessel from being driven on the rocks. The helm was put to port and the engines reversed at full speed. Meanwhile huge breakers appeared on the port bow and washed over the vessel. All the precautions which had been adopted for the safety of the vessel proved to be of no avail, for in a minute after the discovery of the position of the sunken rocks she struck and ran on the rocks as far as midships. It was now seen that the vessel was doomed, and that the only chance for the crew was to take to the boats without delay. The sea was breaking over the ship both fore and aft. Preparations were made to launch the starboard lifeboat. It was swung on the davits ready for lowering, but the crew hesitated for some time to leave the vessel in the boat. Eventually the third officer and six seamen took courage and entered it. While it was being lowered the vessel rolled heavily, and the boat struck against her side with great force. One of the occupants became so alarmed that he jumped out into the sea and was seen no more. Subsequently the boat was got clear of the ship. The port lifeboat had been swung out already for lowering, when an immense wave swept over the vessel, carrying the captain overboard, and after having been tossed about in the sea for two hours and carried away far astern of the vessel, he was rescued by one of the lifeboats, exhausted and almost insensible. Several of the crew, panic-stricken, still remained on board the vessel. They were ordered by the chief officer, who himself lost his life later on, to enter a boat which had been brought to their assistance, but they refused to do so, electing to stand on what are technically known as the fiddles—a position which they could not by treat or entreaty be induced to leave. They soon had to pay a terrible penalty for their timidity or obstinacy, whichever it might be. A sea broke over the vessel, they were swept away, and every one of them perished. The others succeeded in reaching land, and, after enduring much privation and pain, were found by the Amberwitch.

RAJAH RAMMOHUN ROY.

THE fiftieth anniversary of the death of Rammohun Roy, the great religious reformer of India, and the original founder of the Brahma-Samaj, is to be celebrated at Bristol on the 27th of September. Rammohun Roy was born in 1774. When sixteen years of age, he was banished from his father's house on account of his heterodox opinions. He had then written a treatise in Persian "Against the Idolatry of all Religions," and had openly declared his unbelief in the gods worshipped by his father and his countrymen. After spending six years travelling through many parts of India, and even beyond the frontiers of India, to Tibet, he returned to his father's house about 1796. After some years, however, his continued opposition to every form of idolatry, and his determined advocacy of several social reforms—among the rest, the abolition of the burning of widows—produced a new breach between him and his family. His father died in 1804 or 1805, and Rammohun Roy now became still more outspoken in his heretical opinions. He served for a number of years as Diwan or Sheristadar, and when he had gained an independent fortune, retired from the service to settle in Calcutta. This was in 1814, and from that time his house became the centre of the social and religious reformers of the time. The number of his followers grew from year to year, and in 1830 he founded a prayer-hall in Calcutta, where the members of the Brāhm-Samāj have ever since performed their regular religious services. From that year dates the history of the Brāhma Samāj in its various branches, the Adi Brāhma-Samāj under Debendranāth Tagore, the Brāhma-Samāj of India under Keshub Chunder Sen, and the Sādhāran-Samāj. In the same year Rammohun Roy sailed for England, and after spending nearly a year and a half in London and Paris he went to Bristol in September, 1833, to confer with Dr. Carpenter and some other distinguished theologians and scholars who were to meet him there. After a few days he was attacked by fever, and died at Bristol on the 27th of September, 1833. He was buried at first in Stapleton-grove, and in 1843 his remains were transferred to the cemetery of Arncliffe, near Bristol, where a monument was erected to him by Dvarkanath Tagore. Professor Max Muller has been invited, and will deliver an address on the life and work of Rammohun Roy, in the Bristol Museum, on Thursday, the 27th of September, at 8 o'clock.

Lieutenant Field has been confirmed in his appointment in the Military Accounts Department.

Lieutenant C. Davidson, North Lancashire Regiment, has been appointed to the 2nd Punjab Infantry.

Lieutenant James, of the 4th N. I., has been appointed to the Commissariat Department.

Surgeon Wilson, 42nd N. I., will officiate as Civil Surgeon of Bancoorah.

An important despatch containing the decision of the Home Government on the Army Commission's report has been received.

His Excellency the Commander in Chief, accompanied by Col. Rivett-Carnac, military secretary, left Puna for Sirur on Friday, Aug. 17, to inspect the Puna Horse.

Sir R. O. Bright, commanding the Meerut Division, availed himself of his privilege leave on Aug. 15, making over the command to Col. Montgomery Hunter, commanding at Delhi.

In future all native regiments clothed in green will be supplied with mountings for accoutrements of the description now issued to British Rifle Corps—viz., brass for sergeants and rank and file, and German silver for staff sergeants.

The following changes in the reliefs of British cavalry have been made:—10th Hussars from Lucknow to England; 17th Lancers from Mhow to Lucknow; 6th Dragoons or 7th Dragoon Guards, on arrival in India, to Mhow.

The Queen has approved of Captain Sawyer, Bengal Staff Corps, attending the autumn manoeuvres of the Italian Army, in place of Captain A. W. Murray, who is unable to attend on account of ill health.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1883.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Sept. 4; Madras and Allahabad, Sept. 3; Calcutta, Sept. 2.

THIS week's Calcutta telegram in the Times shows that the view we took last week, in our leading article on the proposed compromise of the Ilbert Bill, is entirely confirmed by public opinion in Bengal. It disgusts one side by its apparent hypocrisy, alarms the other by the evil precedent it affords, and pleases no one.

THE fact is, the long and miserable controversy on this ill-timed measure—utterly mischievous as it has been from every point of view of reasonable and discreet statesmanship—has taught, or, at least, ought to have taught us all one thing, and that is, that Lord Ripon's proposals are either altogether right or altogether wrong. After all said and done, the controversy really narrows itself to the one point so prominently put forward by Sir James Stephen at the very commencement—Is the question of jurisdiction in criminal cases to be decided with reference to the just requirements of the accused, or with reference to the feelings and wishes of the Judge, in cases where these two clash? If the latter consideration ought to be the dominant one, then Lord Ripon is right, and Mr. Ilbert's Bill ought to pass, and indeed to be widely extended; if the former, then the mere panic that has been caused among Anglo-Indians (not to mention a vast number of other valid grounds) affords amply sufficient proof that the Bill is altogether wrong and should be honourably withdrawn. The only apparent advantage of the proposed compromise is the negative one, that it impartially disregards both considerations.

LORD RIPON revenges himself, in the latest proposals for a compromise, on the Judges of the High Courts. It is suggested that the High Courts should be given the power to remove cases from the cognisance of a Native to that of a European Magistrate; thereby at a coup throwing on the High Courts both the onus of every miscarriage of justice, and the odium of every precaution taken to prevent such miscarriage. The suggestion has, however, one defect; it is impossible, or rather, superfluous. The High Courts already possess this power, with or without the Ilbert Bill.

THE annual reports of the Bengal Commissioners of Division, just published, conclusively show—what every one with any familiar acquaintance with Bengal knows already—that the vast mass of the native population, equally in the higher and in the lower classes, care nothing whatever about the Ilbert Bill. And most of those who do care—"the majority of the educated natives," as the Commissioner of Burdwan says—regard it "with great dislike and distrust."

THE little clique of noisy agitators in Calcutta, who alone support the Bill, did a bold and clever thing when they promptly nipped in the bud all expression of this "dislike and distrust" by the extreme violence of their attacks on the Raja Shiva Pershad, by the burning in effigy, and so forth. But there are not wanting signs that Bengal itself—and still less India—will not long suffer its noblest and best hearts and intellects thus to be intimidated and coerced by mere virulence. His Highness the Maharaja of Benares has permitted his private secretary to make public the authoritative ruling of the Pandits of Benares in favour of Mr. Justice Norris in the famous contempt case. The protest of the Native Christians of Kishnaghur against the part taken in the recent agitation by one of the leading members of their Church, has been joined in and confirmed by other Native Christian communities. And from all we hear from Calcutta, we very much doubt whether there could be found in that city a dozen Indian gentlemen of respectability who do not express among their English friends in private, that dislike of the Bill which only sensitiveness to vulgar abuse, or respect for the Viceregal office, prevents them from expressing in public.

HAS Lord Ripon, after three and a-half years' residence in India, no means of ascertaining for himself these facts, in regard to the public opinion of the gentlemen of Bengal?—facts which are well known to every Anglo-Indian who is familiar with Bengal, and which are now vouched for officially by the Commissioners of Patna and Burdwan. Or is it that, being determined to crush the upper classes of Bengal by the Tenancy Bill, His Excellency does not care to ascertain their opinion on any public question, lest he should be compelled to consult them in regard to that most mischievous measure?

DURING some days of last week, the sun turned green in several parts of India. Some say it was through envy, because that, even with the most powerful burning-glasses, he could not kindle such conflagrations as Lord Ripon can with a mere goose-quill. Others—among them Mr. Pogson, the Government Astronomer at Madras—say that the phenomenon was due to the passage across Southern India of clouds of sulphurous vapour from the Java volcanoes.

LORD RIPON goes to Kashmir about October 15, and will not re-appear in Calcutta until December 1—by which latter date, we presume, His Excellency will have to decide between right reason, and revolution. It may be feared that sycophants will represent the alternative to be triumph or humble pie; but we still dare hope that the Viceroy will be not only wise enough, but also strong enough, to put honesty before pride, in regard to both the incendiary measures now before the Council.

EVERYONE at Simla knows perfectly well that Afghanistan is swarming with Russian subjects, mostly natives of Turkestan. The Civil and Military Gazette has received news of the arrival of a Russian agent at Herat, who is now said to have gone on to Kandahar. Hence, quite naturally, Reuter's agent telegraphs from Simla that—"The Government has no information confirming the news, recently published by the Lahore Civil and Military Gazette, of the arrival of a Russian agent at Herat." This is a delightful telegram; in reading it, one can almost see the wink in the eye of the telegraphist.

THE announcement in the telegram from the Times correspondent, that all anxiety respecting the crops in the Punjab is now at an end, is very welcome. Apart from the terrible suffering involved in a failure of the crops, the Government would be involved in heavy expenditure, and the trade of Lancashire with India would be very seriously affected. The Times correspondent, however, adds that the rice crop has suffered severely, and doubtless the population will be more or less impoverished by the long drought. It is fortunate, however, that the rains have come in time to allow of the preparation of the land for the wheat crop. The Punjab is the chief wheat-growing district of India, and the sowing will begin next month. It will be possible, therefore, to proceed regularly with the cultivation; and it is probable that the area sown this year will be exceptionally large. The exports of wheat from India have been growing every year, and during the past few months they have been larger than ever. It is expected, therefore, that the acreage will go on increasing.

evening, the scene of a pleasant function, of peculiar interest to Anglo-Indians. A large gathering of some of the most prominent representatives of London and provincial journalism, with many well-known workers in other walks of literature, art, and science, assembled to bid Godspeed to Mr. J. R. Mitchell, late editor of the Western Mail, who is going out to Calcutta to join the editorial staff of the Englishman. The Western Mail under Mr. Mitchell's guidance has, undoubtedly, become one of the most powerful and successful journals in England; whilst its influence, as a highly-cultured, and at the same time a bold and forcible, exponent of the noblest principles of patriotism, and as an unflinching supporter of the honour of the British name, has ever been wielded on the side of right. And whilst the gathering of last Saturday was a striking indication of Mr. Mitchell's popularity, and of the widespread respect that is felt for his character and abilities, it afforded also a pleasing glimpse of the way in which such sterling qualities are able to dissipate all those minor differences that might be supposed to be induced by divergence of political opinion. The chair was ably filled by one of the most eminent of English Liberal journalists, Mr. Russell, the accomplished editor of the Liverpool Post; and he was supported by Mr. Joseph Hatton, Mr. Lascelles Carr, Mr. Mason (of the Worcester Herald), Mr. Larkins, and Mr. Atkinson. The unanimity with which littérateurs of all shades of political opinion united to do honour to the new recruit in the field of Indian journalism may be gathered from the list of postprandial speakers; which included, for English journalism, such redoubtable politicians as the editors of the St. James's Gazette, the Daily Chronicle, and the Echo; and for Indian journalism, Mr. W. Digby, C.I.E. (late editor of the Madras Times, and now secretary of the National Liberal Club), and Mr. Roper Lethbridge, C.I.E., late Press Commissioner.

We are glad to see that the opinion is rapidly gaining ground in India, that the Legislative Council of India, if Lord Ripon and Mr. Gladstone are so ill-advised as to persist in forcing through the Ilbert Bill, will refuse to belie their honesty by passing it at Ministerial dictation. Even the Statesman which has been supposed to be Lord Ripon's organ, now significantly says:—

"It is a curious proof of the complete identity of the Supreme Legislative Council in the eyes of the country with the Executive Council of the Viceroy, that the efforts of the European community are almost wholly directed to the 'withdrawal' of the Bill. Though the Bill should not be withdrawn, it cannot become law unless the Legislative Council, by a majority of votes, make it law. One would naturally suppose from the way in which Mr. Gladstone, Lord Kimberley, and Lord Hartington are referred to, that the Ministry can force the measure upon the Legislative Council. We need hardly say that it can do nothing of the kind. Unless the Legislative Council make it law, it will never be law failing an express Act of the Imperial Parliament. It would be wise we think for Lord Ripon to bring the Legislative Council up to its full legal strength before the Bill is again brought forward. At present, we believe, there are several vacancies therein, the English mercantile community being quite unrepresented through Mr. Miller's retirement. It will please all parties, we imagine, to see the Council strengthened, and it will lessen Lord Ripon's own responsibility."

THE Pioneer writes:—

"Even the Council, unless rumour is utterly at fault, is divided within itself, notwithstanding that of late it has been recruited with members, meritorious in respect of legal or revenue experience, no doubt, but above all things prepared to vote straight. And if a solid vote is eventually given, more than one member, it is notorious, will vote against his deliberate convictions. The subject is, however, tabooed. Official dignitaries are wont to move among their fellowmen with a moody and mysterious air like chief conspirators. Heretofore Indian official life has been honourably conspicuous for its frank interchange of opinion. Ever ready to obey, men were free to discuss public measures without restraint, to the great gain, it may be said, of the Administration. The play of honest and independent discussion did duty for the larger sphere of parliamentary debate, and our rulers might learn from their own servants what was the drift of independent criticism. But now all this is changed. The Viceroy is believed to discourage any private expressions of opinion which are not an echo of his own. His councillors mostly take the cue from their chief. The silence spreads, and as a rule the presence of a member of the Government suffices to stop all allusion to the subject of supreme public interest."

AND the Times of India writes thus on the same subject:—

"While the utterances of Ministers in England regarding the opposition to the Native Jurisdiction Bill are strangely at variance with the declared policy of the Government of India which issued the May Resolution on the importance of fostering the germs of political life, and also issued the September Letter on the value of public criticism of proposed legislative measures, there appears to be also an unaccountable tendency to overlook the fact that an imperial edict is not sufficient to enact a law in British India. The Ilbert Bill has not even been read a first time in the Supreme Legislative Council. It may be convenient to forget all that has been recently urged about the value of representative institutions and the example set by the political energy of the English race; but however anxious the Executive Government may have become to find a pretext for acting on the principle stet pro ratione voluntas, the fact remains that the law-making bodies in India are not mere consultative committees organised on the lines of a 'Council of Legislation' at Cairo. Indications are not wanting that even the members of the Supreme Executive Government will be divided in council, but whatever may be the will of the majority, independently formed or arrived at under the dictation of superior authority, a debate on the measure and the policy of the Government has still to take place in the only Council which can pass the Bill into law. The head of the Government in India who, on the 9th March last said, 'to fair reasons, urged in a manner to which the Government can give heed, the ears of myself and my colleagues will always be open,' must be perfectly aware that in the next debate he will be called upon to give, as solemnly promised, the fullest weight to incontrovertible arguments dispassionately urged in every part of India, as well as in England, with increasing weight, in the months which have elapsed since that assurance was given in such emphatic terms."

A MEETING of the working classes of Allahabad assembled at the Railway Theatre on Monday evening in connection with the agitation against the Criminal Jurisdiction Bill. There were present a large number of the railway employes and tradespeople of the station, with a sprinkling of Government uncovenanted servants. The primary object of the meeting was to express approval of the selection made by the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association in appointing Mr. F. T. Atkins as their deputy to England to explain to the working classes at home the position in which their brother-toilers in this country now find themselves, and the disabilities under which they will labour, should the Ilbert Bill be passed into law. Sundry other resolutions were passed expressive of regret and indignation that the protests and representations of the English-speaking peoples of India should have been hitherto so little heeded by the Government, either here or in England, and of a determination to continue to agitate legitimately for the withdrawal of the Bill. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Collier, of the railway, and the principal speakers were Rev. W. H. N. Brennan, Mr. Duffie, and Mr. Atkins. The proceedings were orderly, and the audience most enthusiastic.

We hope to give next week a full report of the proceedings of this most important meeting.

We learn that the Executive Committee of the International Exhibition have resolved, with the sanction of his Honour the Lieutenant Governor, to erect a temporary hotel, furnished in camp fashion, on the Maidan, west of the cathedral. The building will be divided into three or more blocks, each of which will contain eighty private rooms and a suite of public rooms. A plan of the whole can be seen at the office of the Committee, No. 1, Sudder-street, and it will be let on contract. The charge, exclusive of wine, beer, spirits, and aerated waters, is in no case to exceed Rs. 5 a day, and will be independent of the charge for furnished lodging accommodation, the cost of which (about Rs. 3 a day), will be collected by the Executive Committee. A corrugated iron house will be provided for the kitchens, but stoves and other kitchen appliances must be supplied by the contractor. The public rooms will be furnished by the Committee, but the contractor will be expected to supply table-linen, crockery, glass, and cutlery. Contractors will be obliged to post a tariff of prices for liquors in a conspicuous position.

It is a well-known fact that no English newspaper representative of the Mahomedans of India has hitherto existed. All other sections of the community possessed such organs, and could express their grievances when they pleased. The cause of the Mahomedans, no doubt, suffered from the absence of a paper specially devoted to it. We are therefore extremely glad to observe that the Mahomedans of India have started a paper, which they can call their own. The Mahomedan Observer, a weekly paper published at Calcutta, is a journal which deserves every encouragement at the hands of all English-knowing people, and especially the educated Mahomedans. The paper when started at first was a little costly; but now the publisher has wisely reduced the rate to an annual subscription of Rs.8, including postage. We wish the paper every success and hope that it being the only one of its class, the Mahomedans of India will not let it die away.

With respect to the Indigo Market, the following is from the Circular of Messrs. Thomas Watson and Co:—

"At the Public Sales held yesterday, out of 11,910 packages printed, about 10,800 packages were sold. There was a good demand, and prices were firm for all descriptions except medium sorts, which were rather easier."

The Englishman gives the following with respect to the Freight Market:—

"There is but little of importance to report upon during the past week. Rates have given way slightly for early loading, but for forward both ships and steamers show little inclination to do business, except at rates quite unobtainable at present. Two sailing vessels have found employment during the week for London, and two for Dundee. Our unfixed tonnage has been reduced to 37,000 tons."

The Tea Market is thus reported on by Messrs. Balmer, Laurie, and Co.:—

"The weather during the past fortnight has been generally cold and unfavourable for manufacturing good quality, while the flushes have not been so heavy as might be wished; there continues to be every indication of the crop proving short of the estimates. Assam.—Dibrugarh.—There has been a change over this district lately, and the weather has been rather more favourable for manufacture, but not so good for flushing; on some estates there is a complaint of want of rain. It is feared in some parts that the season will close early, as fogs have already appeared, whereas the first, last year, were in September. As many gardens have only made about half their estimates, the outturn from the district, if this prove the case, will fall rather short as compared with last year.—Jaipur.—Reports of heavy flushes reach us from this part; but perhaps the quality of the tea made is not very desirable; four or five cold wet days have been succeeded by more favourable weather.—Sibsagar.—The weather here, except early in the fortnight, has been fairly favourable; if anything, a little more sun and less rain would have been advantageous; most of the gardens are still considerably behind, but some managers hope to pick up in September and October, as those months were rather short in outturn last year.—Jorehaut.—The weather here does not appear to have continued very favourable as it became rather too cold for the flushes; withering was difficult on account of the rain, and on gardens where space was limited there became heavy accumulation of leaf. Most gardens are still far behind in outturn; some managers think they may pick up in the latter months, but it will be necessary to pluck coarser than they are doing at present.—North Lakhimpur.—Not such good accounts come to hand from this part; copious rain had fallen, and the temperature was low, the coming flushes being chilled and stunted. The thermometer was rising, so later reports may be more satisfactory.—Nowgong.—The weather generally has been favourable during August, and most gardens have been doing fairly well; it is almost too late, however, now to expect to regain in outturn what they have lost as compared with last year; the rainfall is about 14 in. ahead of last year to the same date.—Mungledie.—During the first part of the fortnight, this district had plenty of rain, but cold and bad manufacturing weather; many of the southern gardens have had a fair amount of leaf, but the Dooar gardens, especially during the last week, are almost at a standstill, as it is too cold and more rain is wanted.—Cachar.—

Round Silchar the weather for the past fortnight has been very changeable, with cold, heat, and rain; on 18th and 19th ultimo there was a heavy fall of rain, nearly 4.84 in. and the river has risen considerably. Later reports by letter say the weather is very unfavourable and leaf is not coming out well; the river is very full, and has flooded the low lands; rumours are about that the water is as high in parts as it was in May last. Telegraphic advices report that since the 22nd ultimo, the floods have been very high, and it is expected that the rice crops on the low lands are destroyed. Darjeeling.—During the last fortnight the weather improved, being relieved at intervals with bright sun, but for the last few days rain and mist have been prevalent, making a decided difference in the temperature, which has been as low as 64 degrees; some gardens have pulled up so much during the last few weeks as to be nearly equal with last year in outturn. At Hopetown, the weather has been favourable for tea, with alternate sun and rain; but notwithstanding, the plants do not flush on some estates at all satisfactorily, the leaf being short and hard; the rainfall to date is about 8 inches below last year. Kumaon.—We learn that the weather had been cloudy with breaks of sunshine, and on the whole favourable for tea; the rainfall for the first three weeks of last month was about 5 inches; the highest yield per acre on one estate was close on six maunds, and the average for 100 acres was four maunds. Dehra Dun.—The weather here has been favourable for flushing, on account of the rain, but the nights were rather too cold for the bushes; most of the gardens are behind the estimates in outturn, and it is feared will not pick up now. Kangra Valley.—The weather has been fairly good, although the rainfall is about 29 inches less than last year up to the same time; on the hills there had been some snow, which caused the thermometer to fall in the valley. Round Palampur the gardens seem to be doing well with some thick flushes, and the quality of the tea is well spoken of, as being above the average of this season of the year; more rain is wanted, as the weather is hot and fine, and the monsoon was very light; the gardens are beginning to drop behind last year in outturn. Chittagong.—There has been a favourable break in the rains here, and leaf was being taken more favourably; the rainfall to date is about thirty to forty inches above last year to the same time; a few gardens are doing well as regards quantity, but as a rule most concerns have fallen behind."

The Times of India gives the following obituary of the week:—Mr. Sextus Howard Phillpotts, C.S., judge and sessions judge of Ahmedabad; Mr. P. J. Kay, C.E., East Indian Railway Company's service, Dinapore; Mr. T. Shunguni Menon, C.S.I., ex-Dewan of Cochin; Brigade Surgeon D. C. McAllum, M.D., Madras Medical Department; Surgeon Major Max Grant, A.M.D.; Mr. Halliday, Superintendent of the School of Industry, Rutnagherry; Major C. F. Glass, commandant of the Fort Battery at Agra; Lieut. Arthur Butler, the Norfolk Regiment, Morar.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

The following is the official summary of the reports of the Revenue and Agricultural Department on the state of the season and prospects of the crops throughout India for the week ending August 21:—

"The past week has been marked by a gradual and favourable change in the weather over Northern India, an easterly breeze having taken the place of the hot west winds. In Central and Western India also the latest barometric readings indicate a return of the monsoons. Good rain fell during the week in most of the districts of the Madras Presidency and Mysore, greatly benefiting the standing crops on unirrigated lands. More rain is still needed in some places, but on the whole the crops are in good condition. In the Bombay Presidency moderate showers fell in parts of the Deccan and Southern Mahratta country, but the rainfall is generally insufficient, and the crops have suffered much from the drought. In Sind the river remains low, and injury to the kharif is feared. Nearly three inches of rain are reported from Hyderabad, and the crops are doing well. In the Berar, the rainfall has been slight; but although more rain is needed, the crops have not suffered. Timely and beneficial rain, moderate in quantity, but generally sufficient to remove immediate apprehension, has fallen in Indore and at Neemuch, and at Sutna. In most of the Central India States, however, there was no rain during the week under report and great anxiety is felt for the crops, though later reports are somewhat more favourable. In Rajputana the condition of the crops is daily becoming more critical. Except for very slight showers, rain continues to hold off, and in Serohi half the crop is reported to be irretrievably lost. Scarcity of fodder is also anticipated. From British Burma, Bengal, and Assam the reports continue favourable. In Burma the rainfall has been less than that of the previous year, but sufficient. More rain is still wanted in Hazaribagh, Lohardugga, and Gya of Bengal, and Gowhatty in Assam; elsewhere in those provinces the fall has been ample, and in some places in Bengal heavy. In the Central Provinces the break has been succeeded by a general fall varying from half an inch to three inches, but more is required. The rice crop has suffered considerably, but prospects are on the whole still good. Over the North Western Provinces and Oudh the rainfall has been light and insufficient, but easterly winds and cloudy weather prevail. So far there is no immediate cause for anxiety. In the Punjab, Sialkote, Ferozepore, Rawalpindi, and Dera Ismail Khan, are the only stations from which rain is reported, and in the south eastern districts a failure of the kharif is imminent, should dry weather continue. Agricultural operations remain for the most part unchanged. Harvesting is in progress in Madras. Later kharif sowings continue in parts of the Bombay Presidency, and preparations for the rabi have commenced in the Central Provinces. Ploughing has been nearly completed in Burma, and transplanting of rice seedlings is well advanced. Early rice and jute are being harvested in Bengal, with a fair outturn generally, and transplanting of later rice is going on. Locusts are still reported from Deccan, and excessive rain has injured the rabi crops in Mercara. Floods have also caused some loss in Durbhunga, Chumpan, and other districts of Bengal. Cattle disease of a mild type is generally prevalent, and a scarcity of fodder is beginning to be felt in parts of the North Western Provinces, Punjab, and Rajputana."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Times correspondent, dated Calcutta, September 23 :—

"The proposed modification of the Ilbert Bill—namely, the restriction of its operation to district judges and magistrates, does not give satisfaction either to the friends or foes of the measure. The former complain that it is too small a concession, the latter object to it as an admission of the principle that natives should judge Europeans, and as conferring powers not only on civilians admitted by competition in England, but also on those nominated in India—a new and as yet untried class, and one which is described by strong supporters of the Bill as being confessedly inferior to the existing native uncovenanted service. It appears, moreover, from the published opinions of the local governments and officers that the great majority of those who propose a compromise would confine jurisdiction to competition civilians. It is stated that the Bill will also contain a provision enabling the High Court to remove cases from a native to a European magistrate. This power, however, the Court already possesses.

"The administration reports of the various Bengal divisions lately published in the Calcutta Gazette contain further evidence showing how little the mass of the people really care for the measure. Thus, the Commissioner of Patna writes:—

"The great mass of the people have really only one feeling common to all—the desire to be let alone. All the noisy excitement and vapouring of which we have seen so much in the newspapers lately is lost upon them. The Local Self-Government Bill and the Criminal Procedure Bill are alike viewed with absolute indifference."

"The Commissioner of Burdwan says:—

"As regards the Criminal Procedure Bill, all the collectors of the division report that it is regarded with great dislike and regret by the majority of the educated natives; but so active a propaganda has been organised in its favour by emissaries from Calcutta that the younger and less experienced are carried away by it. They are sedulously taught to regard it as a battle for supremacy between English and Bengalees, in which, if they only stand firm, they are certain to gain the victory, seeing how strongly the Viceroy and the Council lean to their side."

"Much indignation has been excited among the Eurasian community by representations made in London by the President of the Madras Eurasian Association that Eurasians and East Indians were not opposed to Mr. Ilbert's Bill. I am assured that he had no authority to make this assertion on behalf of the community. It is utterly repudiated by the Central Eurasian Association in Calcutta, which has commissioned its President to say that they are at one with Europeans in the matter.

"All anxiety as to the crops in the Punjab is now removed, but the rice crop has suffered greatly. Pasture, however, will be plentiful.

"At a meeting of the Senate of the Bombay University on Monday, it was proposed by a Brahmin that in the regulations the pronoun 'he' and its derivatives should be deemed to denote either sex. An Englishman seconded the motion, which was carried without a division. Many Hindoos, Parsees, and Mahomedans were present. This will have the effect of throwing open the learned professions to women in the western presidency.

"A remarkable phenomenon has been observed lately at several places in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies, and has caused much interest, mingled with not a little alarm among the superstitious. For some days the sun presented a distinctly green colour. Several explanations have been put forward, of which the most plausible appears to be that offered by the Government Astronomer that it is due to the passage across Southern India of clouds of sulphurous vapour from the Java volcanoes.

"The Viceroy leaves Simla about October 15, and proceeds on a visit to Cashmere. He will arrive at Calcutta about the 1st of December.

"The Ameer arrived at Cabul on the 29th ult. His reception was very cordial, and was celebrated with great pomp.

"Maussun Khan, the Persian Envoy, left Candahar on the 30th. He has passed Ghuznee, and is expected daily at Cabul, where great preparations have been made for his reception.

"A Russian subject has arrived at Candahar from Herat, and there is said to be good reason for believing him to be an agent of the Russian Government."

SELECTED ARTICLES.

THE "MORNING ADVERTISER" ON MR. SEYMOUR KEAY.

A writer very little known in India, who has been in England for a few months, and has been puffed into a questionable notoriety by a small clique of Radical publicists, was permitted in the July number of the Nineteenth Century to libel not only the Europeans representing and serving the Queen in India, but generations of English statesmen who must have been partakers in, if not the authors of, the crimes and misdemeanours laid to our charge by this newly-found authority. But the argument, if we may for courtesy's sake use the phrase, was so over-coloured that it carried with it its refutation, and Mr. Seymour Keay might well have been left to return to the obscurity from which he had sprung. But other counsels have prevailed, and perhaps wisely. There may, perchance, have been some dwellers in England—we can hardly say some Englishmen—who would have believed that Great Britain is robbing the people of India, if the Nineteenth Century paper had not been answered. And the answer is most effective, categorical, and complete. If it has not already attracted attention, the cause is, we take it, not far to seek—indeed, we have already indicated it. Mr. Seymour Keay overdid the accusation, and John Indigo—under which name experts on Indian questions will have little difficulty in recognising one of the greatest authorities on Hindustan—especially the western side of it—has, upon that very account, been ignored in the current number of the National Review. Yet the paper would be well worth studying, if Mr. Seymour Keay had never existed or been heard of. It is a lively and striking summary of the benefits which English rule has conferred upon the teeming millions of the great peninsula, which, until our supremacy was established, had been for many centuries the battle-field of races and faiths, the arena in which robber and conqueror contended for the wealth which had been wrung from the patient peasant. Were our supremacy withdrawn, the Babu who is now complaining so sorely of oppression would have another story to tell, and if he were not reduced to the position of serf to Mahratta chieftains, he would be, before many months, in bondage to Sikh or Pathan rulers, or have his home desolated by another incursion of Turki or Tartar hordes, unless he happened, which is very likely, to fall under the ruthless domination of the "sons of the White Czar."

Mr. Seymour Keay has a small business, we believe, in that city of Hyderabad which is the one centre of Mussulman, or rather Arab, intrigue that gives cause for anxiety to prudent rulers of India, and we spare ourselves the inquiry how it happens that an English subject in such a position has shown a disposition to encourage the enemies of his country. Happily, there is no need to indulge in such questions, for John Indigo takes up one by one Mr. Keay's alleged facts, and shows that where they are not gross misrepresentations they are futile deductions from false premisses. For example, it was alleged that our connection with India had added £85,000,000 to the English National Debt, and that it adds £10,000,000 a-year to British taxation on account of military and naval expenditure. There is not one particle of foundation for these statements. India has always paid for her own wars till Mr. Gladstone chose to waste five millions of English money in paying for a share in the cost of the Afghan campaigns, and India repays England for every soldier who goes out. But if the statements were true the situation would not be altered, for the profit on our Indian trade is still worth eighty millions sterling to England, in spite of the recent too successful attempt of the Liberal party, by giving India almost absolutely free trade, to put all other manufacturing countries on as good a footing as our own. There is £200,000,000 of English capital invested in India, producing not only regular interest for those who own it, but incalculable benefits to the country, to which it has given railways, and waterworks, and roads, and telegraphs, and harbours. If this capital had been kept within the four seas it would probably not have produced more than 3 per cent. In India it has made 5 per cent. at the least, and has conferred on Hindustan far more than corresponding benefits. It is true that the Indian revenue has increased in forty years from something under twenty millions sterling to about fifty millions; but during that period we have greatly increased our area by taking over the direct rule of Delhi, Oude, Sind, the Punjab, Nagpur, &c.; and this not, as Mr. Keay alleged, by breach of trust, but mainly by conquest, and that on the principle of self-defence from the bad faith and aggressive propensities of the native rulers. If the Arab intrigues continue at Hyderabad we may have to repeat the process with the territory of the Nizam, a fact which Mr. Keay may reflect over when he returns to Hyderabad after finding that libels and misrepresentations on and of English rule and rulers will not commend him to the electors of either Finsbury or Lambeth. Our Land Revenue has risen from some twelve and a half millions in forty years to some twenty-one millions, partly through the increase of land under assessment from 616,000 to 860,000 square miles, and partly from the enhanced productiveness of the land—a productiveness due to our irrigation works and to the increased facilities for getting crops to market. The increase in the revenue from stamps shows simply greater commercial activity, and the increase from the salt duty is due to greater consumption—for to three-fourths of the people of India the rate of duty has been lowered—and at the worst it is the only tax which falls upon the bulk of the people, the vast majority of whom would pay nothing whatever in support of the system of government from which they derive such substantial benefits, including the priceless benefit of peace and security, if the salt duty were abolished.

Mr. Seymour Keay is everywhere wrong in his figures. A hundred and seventy-six years ago the revenue of Aurungzebe was double that now paid by the people of a far larger dependency than was the empire over which he ruled. And, to come to Mr. Keay's own chosen period, during the last half-century the imports of India have grown from seven and three-quarter millions to sixty and a half millions sterling; the exports have also grown from thirteen millions a-year to eighty-three millions, and consequently the total foreign trade has increased more than sevenfold—an expansion of prosperity, properly says John Indigo, "due to British rule, to order maintained by British troops, and to British capital borrowed at lower interest than it can be borrowed by any country—even the British colonies—outside the United Kingdom." There is no pagoda-tree now to beshaken to the profit of individual Englishmen in India, nor has there been any for nearly half a century. The benefits, therefore, which England and Englishmen derive from India are purely those of a good interest for money, a good market for manufactures, and an opening for enterprise and governing capacity which cannot be said, considering the climate, to be overpaid by the incomes afforded to the servants of the Queen-Empress. As to the statements that the people, even of the Deccan, are getting poorer under British rule, let these answers suffice: The proportion of produce taken as assessment is less than 10 per cent., instead of, as formerly, 25 per cent., and the proportion of assessments paid "punctually and without any process varies in different districts from 97¼ to 99¾ per cent.—figures which will be best appreciated by rate-collectors in London and the most flourishing districts throughout England, who think themselves very well off when they get 70 per cent. without great pressure. We have not space to touch upon what John Indigo truly terms "miscellaneous mendacities" of the minor sort, but we have said enough to show that Mr. Seymour Keay cannot be taken as a trustworthy authority upon any branch of the question of our rule in India; and to those who care to go more deeply into the matter the article by John Indigo will afford ample testimony that our assailant has ventured to trade a little too grossly upon the unfortunately great ignorance of our Empire in the East which still prevails among large classes of our countrymen.

MEDICAL WOMEN FOR INDIA.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

WHEN public opinion is ripe for any movement, the rapid advance sometimes made in a brief space of time is almost startling. This has been emphatically the case with the medical women for India movement. Nearly two years ago attention was directed to the question in the columns of the Times, in connection with the letter sent by the Maharanees of Punnah to the Queen, and about the same time was published Sir Salar Jung's testimony that it would be a great benefit to India, a benefit which could not be exaggerated, if English medical women could settle in the chief towns throughout the country. The movement had really its beginning in India itself. Ten years ago a large-hearted Indian official, Surgeon General Balfour, at that time at the head of the Madras Medical Department, touched by the sufferings of Indian women, victims of the originally Mahomedan practice of seclusion in the zenanas, conceived the plan of educating women doctors at Madras. As early as 1854 European and native pupils were ordered to be received at the Madras Lying-in-Hospital to be trained as midwives and nurses for women and children, and stipends were granted by Government for them. In 1868 the Madras Government wished to have women trained for the general nursing of all classes of the community, and a scheme submitted by Dr. Balfour for giving effect to that wish was sanctioned by Government in 1871, during the administration of Lord Napier and Ettrick. In 1867 a medical school for the maintenance and teaching of native girls, was started at Bareilly by Dr. Corbyn, and in 1871 it was reported to be doing good work, and training up a useful body of humble practitioners. In 1872 Dr. Balfour submitted to Government a comprehensive account of all that had been done in this direction, and asked for an expression of their wishes on the question of throwing open the Madras Medical College to lady students. Drawing attention to the fact that of the 100,000,000 women of India a great part were prevented by their religion or social customs from being attended by medical men, he recommended "the educating in medicine of women who could apply to their sisters in their need the benefits of European medical science." There was really no order prohibiting the entry of women students into the schools of medicine, but he felt, with characteristic Scotch caution, that, as it was a proposal to change from what had been customary, it was prudent to obtain the order of the Government on the subject, "seeing that different opinions prevailed as to the advisability of permitting the innovation." It was not until 1874 that formal Government sanction was given to the admission of lady students to the Madras Medical College, under special regulations, but early in 1875 the desire was expressed by the Madras Government that every encouragement should be given to ladies to study for a degree, in which case they must attend the full curriculum of prescribed studies.

This opening of the Madras Medical College to women nine years ago must be regarded as the starting point of the whole movement, and it is noteworthy that it was initiated by the chief medical officer in the Presidency, and fostered by Government, which in India initiates or promotes most, if not all, successful reforms. Quietly and unobtrusively the work at Madras went on under the kindly guidance of Dr. Furnell, the Principal of the College. The first class of lady students having completed satisfactorily their course, it was brought forward by some as an objection that, when qualified to practise, "there was no rush to secure their services." But if inquiry is made where those ladies are now, it appears that two out of the four hold Government appointments in native States, and that a third, Mrs. Scharlieb, now practising at Madras, is the lady who carried off the highest honours at the University of London last year, distancing all her competitors at the first final examination for a medical degree in which women were qualified to compete, and who left this country bearing with her the warmest good wishes (expressed to her in a personal interview) of Her Majesty the Queen, as well as the hearty good will and prognostications of success of the justly revered Florence Nightingale.

An article published in the Contemporary Review in August, 1882, gave a fresh impetus to the question of medical women for India, and it was followed by enthusiastic advocacy at Bombay of their claims on the sympathy and liberality of the public. In an incredibly short space of time a fund was started in that town, meetings were held and communications entered into with the leaders of the movement in this country. The National Indian Association made the cause its own, and called together a public meeting, presided over by Surgeon-General Hunter, in the rooms of the Medical Society, to consider the steps to be taken. The plan of sending out a few highly-qualified medical women from this country on guaranteed salaries secured the approval of the meeting, and a committee of the association was formed for the purpose of co-operating with friends in India for carrying out that and similar objects. At the present time the Bombay fund exceeds the sum of 40,000 rupees, and two lakhs of rupees (£20,000) have been promised to found a hospital for women. The services of one of the ablest medical women in this country, Miss Pechey, M.D., have been engaged, and she will start for Bombay, in company with another qualified lady, before the end of this year. Public opinion in India is now so strongly enlisted on the side of medical women that we find our native paper saying,—"To the best of our recollection, we have not heard of any movement which has so successfully appealed to the native community as this;" while another writes,—"There is hardly an Indian of any respectability who does not feel the want of trained medical women in India." A scheme has been sanctioned by the Government for the medical education of women at Bombay on the same lines as the original scheme at Madras, and I append the text of an important resolution lately issued by the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, declaring women fully admissible to the classes of the Calcutta Medical College. The resolution comments on the fact that the educational system of Bengal, progressive in other respects, has been illiberal and retrograde in the medical education of women, and on the other fact that some Bengalee ladies have had to betake themselves to the more liberal Presidency of Madras for the prosecution of their medical studies. It is, in Mr. Rivers Thompson's opinion, "clearly opposed to the public good, as well as to the legitimate private interests, that such a state of things should continue." Hence the resolution, in commenting on which the medical Press of this country (not hitherto found to be unanimously in favour of medical women) has expressed within the last month, through such well-known organs as the Lancet and the Medical Press and Circular, approval of the measure, expatiating at the same time on the special need of women doctors in India. Thus we find Government, the medical profession, and the public at one on the vital importance to native women of an adequate supply of doctors of their own sex to treat the diseases from which women in zenanas suffer, and of which, according to the concurrent testimony of such women as Pundita, Romabai, and others, and of eminent medical men practising in India, the vast majority of Indian women would rather die than submit to treatment at the hands of male practitioners.

"From A. P. M'Donnell, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Director of Public Instruction.

"SIR,—I am desired by the Lieutenant Governor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th inst., on the subject of admitting females to the classes of the Calcutta Medical College, and in reply to communicate to you the following instructions and remarks:—

"2. The question of the admission of females to the Medical College classes was first raised in 1876, and it then met with a favourable reception from Sir Richard Temple, who was Lieutenant Governor. Subsequently in 1879, the matter was again discussed, but on neither occasion had the discussion any practical results. Last year the Director of Public Instruction brought the question before the Council of the Medical College, in connection with a wish that had been expressed to him by the parents of some young ladies that their daughters might be permitted to attend the medical classes. Mr. Croft advocated the admission of female students to the college classes, and influenced by the advantages which, in his opinion, a body of qualified female doctors would confer on the community, even urged on the Council the propriety of admitting them on a reduced educational standard. Under the rules framed by the Senate of the Calcutta University, which are now in force, to qualify for admission to the Medical College, young men must pass the First Arts Examination. Mr. Croft recommended the admission of female students to the same privilege on their passing the Entrance Examination. The College Council, however, refused sanction to the admission of females on those terms; and when it was afterwards proposed to waive any exceptional favour to lady competitors in the way of preliminary examination, and to admit them on the same terms as males, the Council affirmed its previous decision, and resolved not to admit females on any terms to the classes of the Medical College. This resolution of the Council you now report for the orders of Government.

"3. The Lieutenant Governor has considered the important question thus submitted to him, and has examined the opinions recorded upon it by the members of the Medical College Council. He regrets to say that in none of the opinions, except those recorded by Drs. Coates, Harvey, and Anderson, can he find any facts which bear examination, or any reasoning which stands the test of criticism. All the force of facts and arguments lies on the side of those gentlemen who favour the admission of females to the Medical College classes; and therefore, even had Mr. Rivers Thompson not formed, independently of this reference, a strong opinion on the subject, he would be bound to approve of that course which, on the papers before him, is recommended by an overwhelming weight of argument. But the admission of females to medical education is a matter on which the Lieutenant Governor had already formed a clearly affirmative judgment, and he has therefore had less hesitation in overruling the decision of the Council of the Medical College than, looking to the weight which must ordinarily attach to the decision of such a body, he otherwise might have had.

"4. On this question, looked at from the standpoint of general policy, as well as of individual freedom, there is not, in Mr. Rivers Thompson's opinion, any room for doubt as to the action which Government should take. It is indeed, in the Lieutenant Governor's judgment, a subject of great reproach to the Bengal Presidency, in which education has made such wide progress, that it should be so far behind other provinces in matters regarding the medical education of native ladies; and this reproach is the more appreciable in that the backwardness of Bengal in this respect would seem to be due, not so much to the prejudice of native parents and guardians (which might, in the present circumstances of India, be only natural) as to the attitude which the Medical College Council have thought fit to assume. Already these provinces have suffered from the Council's failure to take a broad and unprejudiced view on this question; for the Lieutenant Governor learns to his regret that some Bengalee ladies, fully qualified by educational attainments for admission to the College, have had to betake themselves to the more liberal presidency of Madras, there to prosecute those medical studies from which the Council of the Calcutta Medical College had excluded them. It is, in Mr. Rivers Thompson's opinion, clearly opposed to the public good, as well as to legitimate private interests, that such a state of things should continue, and that the educational system of Bengal, progressive in other respects, should be illiberal and retrograde in this. Illiberality here has great and numerous evil consequences. It encourages zenana prejudices, it strengthens the barriers of caste, and it suppresses the natural and reasonable aspirations of Indian ladies to enter a profession which would find, in India of all countries in the world, a wide sphere of action and of beneficent service. Every day that passes widens our knowledge of the fact that among the native community there are women in every position of life who would prefer death to treatment by a male physician, and the misery caused by neglected and unskilfully treated illness must be widespread and most lamentable. There is but one way by which this suffering can be relieved, and that is by the medical education of females; for in the present conditions of Indian life it would be useless to wait till opposition, based upon prejudices (if such they can be called) is removed. The Lieutenant Governor therefore considers it his duty to support this movement; and he looks on the objections which have been made to it, on the ground of the difficulty of teaching mixed classes, or the alleged inaptitude of females for the profession of medicine, as unsubstantial and obsolete. Experience gained in Europe, in America, and in Madras, has shown that mixed classes can be taught without any bad results, while the aptitude of women for the study and profession of medicine is, in the Lieutenant Governor's opinion, no longer open to discussion or doubt. Even if the aptitude of women for the profession of medicine were still an open question it would be an inadequate objection here, for the fitness or unfitness of women to practise medicine can only be proved by experience. The issue, therefore, is—shall it be put to that proof in Bengal? The ladies who apply for admission to the College will be the only losers if they fail in the trial; the community will be the great gainers if they succeed. For his own part, the Lieutenant Governor has no doubt they will succeed far beyond the expectations of their most sanguine supporters, and he looks forward to a not distant time when Calcutta hospitals shall be partly officered by lady doctors. And if the success of the principle be established in the capital, there is no reason why our medical schools in the provinces should not afford opportunities for a more general extension of the policy, with incalculable advantage to the country.

"5. As regards the proposal to lower, in favour of females, the educational standard of admission to the Medical College, the Lieutenant Governor is entirely of your opinion that it should be negatived. Mr. Rivers Thompson would open the College doors wide to students of both sexes; but he would not specially favour either sex. Did the power of reducing the educational standard which qualifies for admission to the College rest with him, and not, as it does, with the Senate of the University, the Lieutenant Governor would certainly abstain from exercising it, for he knows of no profession in which a liberal preliminary education, training the faculties of observation and thought, is more needed than in the profession of medicine. Mr. Rivers Thompson, therefore, thinks it would be conferring a fatal gift on the cause of female medical education to expose it to the risk of practical failure by withdrawing the necessity for that solid foundation of general knowledge on which the superstructure of technical information can only be safely built. In conclusion, I am to say that in now declaring females fully admissible to the classes of the Calcutta Medical College, the Lieutenant Governor is confident that he can count on the loyalty and zeal of the professors to bring his policy on this question to a successful issue.

"6. All arrangements in regard to separate seats, screens, and waiting-rooms for females, which it has been suggested may be necessary in order to give effect to these orders, can be safely entrusted to the discretion of the Principal, Dr. Coates.

THE EUPHRATES VALLEY ROUTE TO INDIA.

ON Thursday, at the meeting of the Mechanical Science Section of the British Association, Mr. J. Brunlees, C.E., presiding,

Mr. J. B. Fell read a paper on "The Euphrates Valley Railway as an Alternative Route to India." The author contended that the construction of such a railway was every year becoming more urgent and imperative, both from commercial and political considerations. The length of the line from Alexandretta via Bagdad, to Bussorah would be 850 miles, the average gradient 1 in 500, and there would be few curves beyond Aleppo less than 20 chains radius. The estimated cost for a full gauge single line, with passing places, was £10,000 a mile, or £8,500,000, and the estimated net revenue of £473,601 would be sufficient to pay 5½ per cent. on the estimated cost. He considered that the Euphrates Valley Railway would be able to compete on advantageous terms with the Suez Canal for a considerable portion of the existing goods traffic to the East, and the advantage of this route over that of Egypt for the transit of passengers, troops, and the mails would be immense and indisputable, as, besides avoiding the oppressive heat and climate of the Red Sea, there would be a clear saving of five days in the journey between London and Bombay. On the whole, Mr. Fell thought the Euphrates Valley, as a commercial undertaking, would appear to have quite as great a certainty of success as the Suez Canal had previous to its being made. But, in addition to a fair prospect of being a commercial success, the Euphrates Valley Railway had the certainty of being a very great political success. With not only its commercial, but also its strategical and political advantages, it must be admitted, in the opinion of the author, that the Euphrates Valley Railway has the prospect of being one of the most successful enterprises in the world; and when public opinion has been brought to realise this fact, the Government probably will not delay to give the guarantee and the support required for providing the necessary capital and for obtaining the concession.

The Rev. Canon Tristram said he had recently travelled over the Euphrates Valley, on horseback, in company with a Danish engineer, and he approved of the construction of a railway there as an alternative route to India. He attached great importance to such an undertaking, both in a commercial and a political aspect, but in his opinion the point of departure on the Mediterranean ought to be Seleucia, and not Alexandretta, which had been selected by General Chesney and Sir John McNeil.

THE LATE SIR SALAR JUNG.

It is proposed to erect at the Hyderabad Residency and in the cantonment of Secunderabad some memorial of Sir Salar Jung, in token more especially of his friendship towards the Government of Her Majesty the Queen-Empress and his great kindness and hospitality to Europeans. The name of Salar Jung is well known to all Englishmen, but the following words of the Resident, who presided over a public meeting at Hyderabad, may aptly be quoted here:—"Those of us who are Englishmen mourn for one who, while true to his religion and country, and ever feeling that his first duty was to his own Sovereign, was for thirty years the loyal friend and often the trusted adviser of the Government of Her Majesty the Queen-Empress, gave us his entire and devoted support at a time of danger, and has extended to us personally a thousand kindnesses. Himself of noble origin, he has set an example to Hyderabad which has done much to make society here something quite different to what it is anywhere else in India. He was emphatically—and in the best sense, and not merely by his official rank—the foremost gentleman in the place. His hospitality and liberality were, as we all know, unbounded, and equally remarkable was his liberality of thought. In no place in India are benevolent institutions of all creeds and denominations aided so largely and with such catholic impartiality." It is believed that friends and admirers of the late Minister will be glad of an opportunity of showing their regard for his memory by contributing to these memorials, and subscriptions may be remitted either to Sir George Yule, 30 Clarendon-gardens, Bayswater, or paid to the account of the "Salar Jung Memorial Fund," at the London and Westminster Bank (branch), St. James's-square, S.W. In Hyderabad city a separate memorial is proposed in the form of waterworks, a supply of water for the city being greatly needed; but the promoters do not invite subscriptions to this outside the Nizam's dominions, though they will gladly accept aid, and anyone preferring to contribute to this memorial can state his wish in a note accompanying his remittance.

THE DORIAN FRUIT OF BURMA.

ONE of the favourite fruits at Rangoon is the dorian, which is brought in large quantities from Moulmein, and the rind of which has a most peculiar and overpowering smell. Every year special steamers are sent from Rangoon to Mandalay with shipments for the use of the King and the palace, though after the voyage only about 2 per cent. arrive fit for eating, while the smell of the bad ones is enough to betray their presence all up the river. Good dorians sell at Rangoon for a rupee each, owing to the fact that in Burmese times the dorian tree was as great a monopoly of the Government as is the teak, and consequently very few were allowed to be planted. But in the southern districts, which have been longer under British rule, they are plentiful enough, and can be bought at from eight to ten rupees per 100 in the gardens. Bad as the dorian is for the olfactory nerves, the Friend of India mentions another fruit called tanienthe, which is in great favour with the Burmese for their curries, and the effects of which are at once experienced by standing within a few feet of the person who has been indulging in it. The odour is impossible to conceal. The Burmese consider it an excellent digestive and tonic, though there are very few Europeans who can go the length of trying more than one experiment upon it.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN INDIA.

THE rapid growth of the liquor traffic in many of the towns of India is exciting serious attention. In a memorial addressed by the leading native gentlemen to the governing authorities in Ahmedabad it is stated that formerly there were about twelve liquor shops in the city and neighbourhood, while at present more than thirty-two shops are in existence. The consumption is more than doubled. Temptations are presented by opening liquor shops in localities where they have never existed for centuries; and the result is a visible decay in the morality and happiness of the people, even in the division of Kharia, which is mostly inhabited by the higher castes of the natives, who are enjoined by their religious tenets and caste laws to abstain wholly from spirituous liquors. Attention is called to the fact that the Government of India have more than once recognised the importance of checking the growing disposition of the people to strong drink. Thus a Government resolution of the 17th of September, 1838, says:—"It cannot be too strongly urged upon the collectors that the object which Government has in view is to restrain, and, if possible, to correct and diminish, the total actual consumption of spirituous liquors, whether clandestine or licensed, being fully persuaded that any amount of revenue that may be lost by the efficiency of the system for this end will be repaid a hundred fold in the preservation and advancement of moral feelings and industrious habits among the people." A Government resolution, dated June 22, 1844, states that "Government would very willingly relinquish all revenue from this source, could it thereby abate the increasing vice of drunkenness." A letter of the East India Company's Court of Directors, dated June 14, 1843, directs that the "greatest activity should be encouraged in the prevention of smuggling, but no officer should be allowed to believe that it forms part of his duty to throw temptation in the way of the people with a view to increase the revenue of his district. . . . Government desire that every opportunity be taken to diminish the number of shops." After offering arguments against the official plea usually advanced by the Abkaree Department, that increased facilities are given in order to check the illicit consumption of liquor, the native memorialists add:—"We observe from the English newspapers that a change is being gradually worked in the mind of the good people of England to restrict the liquor traffic as much as possible; Bills are passed to prohibit the sale of liquor on Sundays; Bills are being introduced to give legislative power to the people to decide by majority whether there should be any liquor shop within their districts or not. Some of the noble landlords do not allow a single liquor shop within their extensive estates. A good many philanthropic gentlemen are devoting their time and money to preach the doctrine of temperance throughout the country, and the number of total abstainers is increasing every year. The good people of England rejoice to see a decrease in revenue derived from liquor excise during the last official year in the United Kingdom, because it denotes a decrease in the vice of drinking. The present illustrious Prime Minister of England, Mr. Gladstone, has declared in one of his speeches that the evil produced from drunkenness is equal to the combined evils of 'war, famine, and pestilence.' While such noble exertions are being made to check the vice of drinking in Great Britain, it is melancholy to think that the people of this country, who by their religious feelings and from habits and customs are very abstemious, should be tempted to the adoption of the evil vice of drinking, and we therefore most respectfully but earnestly beg that Government should take this matter into serious consideration, and put a stop to the system by which the people are tempted to ruin."

THE PLANTERS AND THE ILBERT BILL.

To J. J. J. Keswick, Esq., Chairman European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association.

Dear Sir,—I have to thank you for your telegram informing me of this meeting, and inviting the attendance of a representative on the part of the Behar planters. All the planters that I have been able to consult on the subject agree with me that they cannot be better represented than they are already by the members of your Committee, both as to their feelings and interests. Should, however, it be deemed advisable that special members of the Committee should be deputed to act for the planting community of Behar on the part of the Planters' Association, I would ask Messrs. Murdock, Flemington, and Cruickshank to act in our behalf. In the present state of North Behar—what with floods and other reasons—it would be a physical impossibility to convene a representative meeting of our scattered community within the next fortnight. If not trespassing too much on the time of the meeting, I think the present attitude of the planters of Behar on the Criminal Procedure Amendment Bill should be known to it. It is briefly that we cannot believe that Government will be so utterly regardless of the feelings of the British community, now that they have been made aware of them, as to force a measure on us so utterly repugnant to us, so damaging to our material interests, and so destructive of the harmony that should subsist between us and our native fellow-subjects. For this reason we silently, but anxiously, await the publication of the reports of the several Local Governments, in the hope that it will be followed by the withdrawal of the Bill. But should we be wrong in this hope, a feeling of most bitter disappointment will be the result. I will not take up your time with all the wild and bitter words I hear every day on this subject but think the general feeling amongst planters is that no law passed here in India can deprive an Englishman of his inherent and indefeasible right to be tried by his countrymen. In discussing the point, we are asked—"In the event of this Bill becoming law, and of your being summoned before a Native Judge to be tried by him, what will you do?" Individually, we say: "I will, of course, obey the summons of Her Majesty's Court, and stand my trial, as I must do; but I will not plead to that Court, nor will I do anything that can be construed into a recognition of that Court's right to try me." But collectively we say: "The first native that tries a planter without the planter's consent to his jurisdiction—we will probably have that native out of Court and try him." This may sound wild language, but it is well you should know the feeling on the subject, and when men are prepared to face all risk for a principle, or, if you will, a sentiment, it is difficult to place a limit to probabilities. Then, we are asked as volunteers, "What will you do?" On this point, I answer for 270 sabres, and say that, however we may be treated by Government, however little regard may be shown for our feelings, our own interests, or our liberties—as volunteers we are its servants, and, if called on, will defend its honour with our lives. Nor do I believe there is an Englishman in the country of any rank or class who will do otherwise. But leaving loyalty aside, which would be worthless, indeed, if it did not stand a trial, for what would Government alienate the trust of its best subjects? I have daily opportunities of hearing the opinions of all classes of natives—zemindars, merchants, and ryots—and I have not yet heard a native of Behar say a word in favour of this measure. On the contrary, they say: "You are degrading yourselves without any benefit to us." In conclusion, I would say on behalf of the planters of Behar—act for us fully in this matter, and we will support you with one reservation, and that is, there must be no compromise of the principle that underlies our opposition to this Bill. The precedent of its relaxation in the case of Presidency magistrates, although not applicable in many most material points, has already been quoted against us.—Yours, &c., Mozufferpore, Aug. 22, 1883.

W. B. HUDSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WHEAT TRADE OF CALCUTTA.
TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—After fifteen long years of deliberation, the Government of India has at last expressed its desire not to make a railroad from Calcutta to Bombay, via Midnapoor. I beg to invite your attention to its letter of the 17th ult., addressed to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, and published in the Allahabad Pioneer Mail of the 26th idem, page 201.

The reason assigned for refusing to make a direct road between the two great cities is the heavy expense; but surely, Government has learned that important railways are expensive. The East Indian Railroad was a very expensive one to make; the tunnel near Monghyr and Turnbull's Bridge over the Soane River, west of Dinapore, cost fortunes, notwithstanding which the shareholders receive excellent dividends.

Why should £10,000 a mile be so frightful an expenditure as to prevent Calcutta from having direct communication with Bombay? Our Imperial Government proposes to go seventy-one miles out of the direct route in order to save one million and a quarter!

The money will not, however, be saved, for in Paragraph 8 the Secretary wrote:—

"It is very possible that at some future date, when the trade of the Upper Provinces and Chota Nagpoor has attained a far larger development, a line from Dugur to Howrah or Hooghly may be found profitable."

We expend more than £10,000 a mile on some railroads in foreign countries, which railroads may be employed in making war on us, and yet we grudge to expend as much on a railway in India, which may be the means of saving the British Empire.

In Paragraph 6 Government pleads that it might not be able to obtain cheap coal for a railway through Midnapoor, and yet in the succeeding paragraph it alludes to the excellent navigable canals as being formidable competitors of the proposed railway. Has the Indian Council not yet learned from Sir Arthur Cotton that on large canals navigable by steam-vessels, cheap coal can be conveyed? Why should we be frightened with the spectre of canal competition when we know how canals cheapen coal? Has not the lucrative East Indian Railway to compete with the water communication of the mighty Ganges?

If you could convoke a public meeting in London, the Midnapoor Railway would be enthusiastically voted for, not only by the merchants, but by our great engineers and financiers, and by true statesmen of all shades of party.—Your obedient servant,

T.

THE "ENGLISHMAN" ON MR. CROSS.

THE statement made by Mr. Cross in the House of Commons regarding the opinions of the Local Governments on Mr. Ilbert's Bill is an attempt to hoodwink that assembly which surpasses in audacity even the late endeavour to deceive the British public by the notorious "cooked" telegrams. It not only conceals the most important part of the truth, but it misrepresents that part of the truth which it discloses. It conceals the fact that such of the local Governments as have minuted against withdrawal of the Bill, have done so in spite of the adverse opinion of the great majority of the officers whom they consulted. It conceals the nature of the specific proposals which they have made for the modification of the Bill, which had only to be stated to show that they amounted to a complete surrender of the grounds on which the measure was originally proposed, and in one case to a crushing indictment against the Bill and the conduct of the Government in bringing it forward. It conceals, again, every fact which might enable Parliament to form a just estimate of the comparative value of the "summed up" opinions.

But there is a suspicion of worse than this. It is notorious that the whole of the opinions have long since been received by the Government of India. Yet Mr. Cross stated that the "summed up" opinions of the Governments of Burmah, Kurg, and Haiderabad had not been received.

That may have been true as regards the home Government. But it could be true even in this sense, only if the Government of India had failed to employ the telegraph for the purpose of supplying the necessary information. Now, we know that the Government of India does not hesitate to employ the telegraph for the purpose of conveying information of the kind to the home Government, when it suits its purpose to do so; and the only natural inference in this case is that it did not suit its purpose that these opinions should reach England before the rising of Parliament.

THE INDIAN PRESS ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE GOVERNMENT AS A LANDLORD.

THE present Government is sometimes accused of undue liberality with the money of Zemindars, but no one can fairly charge it with extravagance in its expenditure in improving the condition of the tenants on its own estates, the Crown lands of India. According to a recent order, the amount available for the improvement of State lands is limited to one-half per cent. of the rental. By this rule, an English squire, with a property yielding four thousand a year, would spend only a twenty pound note on maintaining his farms in order, drainage, and all the other charges incident to proprietorship. In India, the field for improvement of agriculture is a wide one, the breed of domestic animals needs new blood, trees have to be planted, irrigation provided for, better seeds introduced, wastes reclaimed, pasture and firewood reserves provided; and Government, with a laudable perseverance, urges landlords to see to all these things. On its own property, however, it explains its views upon all these subjects by the practical reserve of a half per cent. As the sum is not large, we hope it will be judiciously expended by the Board of Revenue, the responsible authority which recently discovered that it had not even a list of the estates it is supposed to manage. The Government Estates Improvement Fund, which amounted to seven and a-half per cent., has been abolished. With the example of this half per cent. liberality before them it is not a matter of surprise if some Zemindars have been behind in improving their property.

THE BEHAR ZEMINDARS.

To the Honourable Augustus Rivers Thompson, C.S.I., C.I.E., Lieutenant Governor of Bengal.

May it please your Honour,—We, the Zemindars of this Province, have been filled with great consternation, anxiety, and alarm on the perusal of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, the object whereof appears to be to redistribute property in land on a new basis, contrary to the terms of the Permanent Settlement, and we take this opportunity of your Honour's advent amongst us to solicit your Honour's protection against the revolutionary measure which threatens our existence.

2. While your Honour is on this spot, we crave the favour of your Honour's instituting a sifting inquiry as to the actual relation between landlords and tenants in this province, as to the condition of the ryots, as to their customary rights, as to the suitability of Bhowli tenures, as to the peculiar circumstances of Behar, and as to the alleged existence of such zemindary oppressions, as the present law, it is said, is powerless to reach. We respectfully beg the favour of your Honour's ordering an inquiry as to whether the proposed measures are not calculated to produce strife and discord, to cause constant friction, and to lead to litigations which will prove alike the ruin of Zemindars and their tenantry.

3. We humbly crave leave to bring to your Honour's attention the significant fact that already there is much depreciation in the value of landed estates, the property of Zemindars. The selling price of small zemindaries has, since the agitation for changes in the rent law has commenced, fallen from thirty-two years to sixteen years' purchase, and there is a tendency to further decrease. Negotiations for sale have broken off, and in many estates the friction has already commenced, the ryots en masse, in view of the coming changes, withholding the payment of their just rents.

4. Under the circumstances, we respectfully beg that your Honour, as our ruler, will convey our feelings of alarm and anxiety to his Excellency the Viceroy and his Council, and will cause protection to be given to us against the threatened deprivation of our property.

And as in duty bound, we shall ever pray for long life and prosperity to your Honour.

"THE ENGLISHMAN" ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

FROM the telegram from Birbhum, which we publish above, it will be seen that the landholders of Bengal are at last imitating the example of their sturdier brethren in Behar, and taking active steps to give public expression to the sense of indignation and alarm with which they regard the threatened violation of their great Charter, the Permanent Settlement of Lord Cornwallis. We speak of the law in question as a Charter; but it is something more than that. It is in effect a solemn contract, quite as much as was the famous Magna Charta granted to the Barons of England at Runnymede; a contract ratified then, and repeatedly thereafter, by the Legislature, and a contract on the faith of which all subsequent transactions connected with the transfer of landed property have been entered into.

We not long ago pointed out that the attempt of the Government of the present day to tamper with that contract is rendered the more invidious by its despotic character. Where a representative Legislature decides upon varying or rescinding a contract entered into by its predecessors, it acts with the virtual consent of both parties. Yet, even in such a case, the amplest compensation is always granted to those whose interests are injuriously affected by the change. But, in the present instance, it is one party to the contract which proposes, of its own motion, and by the abuse of a plenary power, to override one of its most important provisions, in a way which must not only most seriously affect the pecuniary interests of the other party, but work a complete revolution in their status. As the landholders of Behar justly point out, one effect of the provisions of the Bill, should it become law, will be to reduce them to mere ciphers on their own estates, a result which, while an injury to the least of them, amounts also to a grave indignity to the representatives of the more ancient houses among them.

But not only is it one of the parties to the contract, which, without the consent of the other, and without valid justification, thus proposes to set at naught its obligations; it proposes to do this without granting the smallest compensation to its intended victims.

We have no hesitation in saying that the course on which the Government appears to be bent in this matter, is one which must prove utterly destructive of that confidence in its good faith which has hitherto proved one of the surest bulwarks of its power, and that, therefore, whatever its immediate effect on that power may be, its ultimate effect must be in the highest degree prejudicial.

If the Government thinks that by thus aggrandising the peasantry of the country, at the cost of the aristocracy, it is raising up for itself a source of strength that will more than counterbalance its forfeiture of the good will of the class it proposes to sacrifice, we can only say that it is leaning upon what the uniform teachings of Indian history show to be a rotten reed. The feeling of allegiance to the great Zemindars, many of them representatives of ancient royal houses, is deeply rooted in the hearts of the people of the country, and no attempt of a foreign Government to eradicate it, by stirring up antagonism between the two classes, will have more than temporary effect.

The policy of the Government is the policy of men who are not only willing to sacrifice justice and faith for the sake of an idea, but who are absolutely ignorant of the real feelings of the people they have been called upon to govern.

MR. GLADSTONE ON THE ILBERT BILL.

(Times of India.)

THE telegram in which Mr. Gladstone expressed so politely his opinions as to the desirability of sitting upon the Anglo-Indian community, came in for a large share of attention at the Calcutta meeting, and it was evident that it was not calculated to allay the bitterness of the agitation in Bengal. The ill-advised statement is emphatically condemned on all hands. The Civil and Military Gazette thinks that "Mr. Gladstone's speech has been the most dangerous in its tendency of any that have been delivered by supporters of the Ilbert Bill. Even Lord Ripon, if he has the least share of the discretion with which he is credited, must see that, to foster the feeling that Anglo-Indians, as a class, are overbearing, and must be checked, may lead to very serious consequences." The Madras Mail makes the following comments on the same subject:—"There is apparently some curious 'hanky-panky' going on between Simla and Westminster in connection with the Ilbert Bill. All of a sudden Mr. Gladstone and Lord Hartington have become ardent advocates of the Bill. The Premier declares that Anglo-Indian ascendancy requires checking, and Lord Hartington hopes the Bill will pass into law. Such utterances, from such men, come very like an order to the Indian Government to ignore the opinions which have been expressed against the Bill by the whole body of officials and non-officials in India. In common fairness, Ministers at home have no right to give expression to these opinions before they have had an opportunity of consulting the opinions which the Government of India had invited on the Bill." The following outspoken utterances of the Englishman also indicate an unusual degree of irritation—"A conviction has been growing up for some time past among all classes of the community that the time is approaching, if it has not already arrived, when action must take the place of argument. Mr. Gladstone's calumnious and threatening speech in the House on Wednesday has swept away the hope that has alone hitherto prevented this feeling from finding public expression, and it is not surprising that it was reflected strongly in more than one of the speeches on Thursday evening, and still more strongly in the enthusiastic response which its expression called forth from the indignant multitude that filled the hall. It would be useless to conceal the fact that a marked and ominous change has come over the tone of the community. With no provocation but the studious moderation shown for some months past by its leaders, Mr. Gladstone has been guilty of the supreme folly of telling a powerful British community that they must be suppressed; and they are to undergo this process, not because they have been guilty of any act of disloyalty, but merely because they have shown that they inherit a share of the spirit by which their forefathers won for themselves liberty and empire. The initiative in menace has thus come from him, and he must not be surprised if the gauntlet is taken up! How unwilling the community still are to depart from an attitude of respectful remonstrance will appear from the resolutions passed at the meeting. Those resolutions assert their claim to the last constitutional remedy remaining to them—a remedy which the Viceroy has already assured them of his willingness to grant. We prefer believing that Mr. Gladstone's words were spoken in haste to speculating on the possible consequences of a rejection of a just prayer. But the fact that such speculation is rife wherever two or three Englishmen meet together in India is none the less real and none the less grave."

It is reported from Rawul Pindi that on the 27th instant a court-martial will assemble there for the trial of a young officer of the Royal Irish, on charges connected with monetary matters.

Lieutenant H. C. Powell, attached to the 9th N.I., returns to a British regiment, "having failed to pass the necessary tests within the prescribed period."

Lieutenant Neville, Cheshire Regiment, has been removed to the 2nd Battalion.

The following officers have been appointed probationers for the Staff Corps:—Lieutenant Melville, 1st Suffolk, to 4th N.I.; Lieutenant Ellison, 2nd Loyal North Lancashire, to 10th N.I.; and Lieutenant Pinhey, Liverpool Regiment, to 23rd Bombay N.I.

The question has been mooted as to whether the disestablished musketry instructors serving in India, who from affluence have dwindled down to almost poverty, are to be given the two months' bonus in the same way as was done in the case of their disgraced brethren in England.

The Government of India have sanctioned the formation of the boys of the Kurseong School into a cadet section, to be attached to the B Company of the Northern Bengal Volunteer Rifle Corps.

THE DEGRADATION OF THE BENGAL RYOT, THREATENED BY THE TENANCY BILL.

Will the Bengal Tenancy Bill benefit anyone section of the community, if it be forced into law? On the face of it, it not only confiscates a large share of the property of the Zemindars, but also inflicts on them the still more serious injury of withdrawing from them the control of the land they have hitherto regarded as belonging to them—reducing them to the position of mere annuitants or rent-chargers. But will the Bill, at the cost of this glaring injustice to the landowners, confer any corresponding benefit of a substantial or durable character on the tenants?

It may be admitted that the immediate and ostensible benefits are sufficiently specious to give colour to those incentives to discontent and disturbance, which are being flaunted before the wondering eyes of the hitherto fairly contented and prosperous Bengal ryot by the supporters of Lord Ripon's policy. The ryots are not only promised, by the Bill, a sudden and outrageous extension of those occupancy-rights which they have been hitherto peacefully and quietly acquiring under the operation of Act 10 of 1859; but they are also to be endowed with the power of free-sale of these occupancy-rights—a power that is absolutely foreign to all the customs and traditions of the country. This power is really, and will strike the imagination of every discontented ryot as being, a douceur in ready cash, arbitrarily extracted by the Government from the pockets of the Zemindars and presented to the ryots; for, with numerous money-lenders in every district eagerly thirsting for investments in land, and large numbers of indigo-planters reasonably anxious to acquire extended facilities for sowing indigo, it is perfectly certain that the market for this class of investment, to be created under the Bill, will be a most lively one—and that these transferable occupancy-rights (which are henceforth to confer an infinitely more effective control over the land than that which will be vested in the nominal landholders) will be sold to the new middlemen, until there are no cultivating occupancy-ryots left with a bigha to sell. We ask any unprejudiced reader to say, whether such a measure is not certain, in the long run, so far from improving the condition of the cultivating ryots, to degrade them to the condition of day-labourers hardly better off than serfs?

The amazing thing is, that Lord Ripon's Government seems to be perfectly aware of the mischief it is doing—and to be placidly content to bequeath to its successors the duty, not only of repairing the frightful damage, but even of ascertaining whether there be any possible means of repairing it. Mr. Ilbert, in Section 41 of the Statement of Objects and Reasons annexed to the Bill, blandly remarks:—

"That the powers of transferring which the Bill recognises may in time lead to a state of things in which the great bulk of the actual cultivators would be not occupancy-ryots, but under-ryots with little protection from the law, is indeed within the range of possibility; but if such a state of things should ever arise we may rest assured that the Government of the day will know how to deal with it."

It will be readily believed that Lord Ripon's astute law-member would hardly make such a damning confession as this, if the probabilities of the case were not so patent as to be beyond the range of honest or even decent controversy. When Mr. Ilbert admits that it is "within the range of possibility" that the great bulk of the actual cultivators will, under this beautiful Bill, lose their status as occupancy-ryots, and become "under-ryots with little protection from the law," few will find it hard to believe the positive assertion of nearly every impartial bystander, who is familiar with the circumstances of the country, that the great bulk of the actual cultivators are absolutely certain to become mere coolies, with no protection whatever (in regard to rights they will no longer possess) from the law. The only hard thing to believe, in the whole matter, is, that any civilised Government, understood to consist of intelligent and benevolent statesmen, could thus—with their eyes open—with no pressure or demand from any person or class, and in cynical disregard of the protests of the class immediately affected—persist in forcing on the ryots a boon that must be fatal to them, whilst it is filched from the Zemindars, whom it will leave poor, indeed. And be it remembered that Lord Ripon is doing this in direct defiance of the recommendations of the Behar Rent Commission of 1878—and in opposition to the experience of the North-Western Provinces, where occupancy-ryots are not permitted to transfer their holdings.

And we would remark, par parenthèse, that when we speak of the occupancy-ryot having the right of "free sale" under the Bill, we can only do so with a qualification. He can sell his occupancy-right to anyone he likes (to his landlord's greatest enemy, for instance) except—to the landlord himself! It is true that the landlord is mocked with a proviso that actually purports to give him the privilege of pre-emption, "at a price to be fixed by the Civic Court." But when we examine what it is he is allowed to buy, we find it is a commodity altogether different from that which any other purchaser would acquire—and is, in point of fact, a commodity absolutely valueless, except in the very unusual case where the landholder might be able to undertake the personal cultivation of the land. For, mirabile dictu, when the landlord has exercised his pre-emption, and has paid to his old tenant the price fixed by the Civil Court, he is not allowed to sell this commodity, or even to keep it in his own possession, unless he can cultivate the land himself. Directly he lets the land to a new tenant, that new tenant ipso facto acquires the very commodity which the landlord had been supposed to buy; and of course this bleeding process can be continued indefinitely. Thus, when the landlord exercises his precious "privilege (!)" of pre-emption, the occupancy-right at once becomes pro hac vice a commodity inherent in the land itself, and no longer a transferable commodity; but, on the other hand, if a money-lender or any one else buys it, not only can he sell it, or deal with it precisely as he likes, but further—the tenants who now take the land, and cultivate it under the money-lender, have no rights whatever against him not even Mr. Ilbert's "little protection from the law!"

The tradition that a curse is attached to the enjoyment, even under the sanction of the law, of that which rightfully belongs to others, is doubtless a superstition outside the sphere of our modern "practical politics." But we think it is very evident that, under the simple operation of ordinary economic laws, the property that Lord Ripon proposes to take away from the landlords of Bengal will benefit no one. Doubtless, while the plunder is being consumed, there will be a brief and illusory appearance of prosperity in the country. On the proceeds, the ryots will have a short spell of "ryotous" good living—that is to say, marriages, fireworks, feasts, and tamashas of all sorts, will be the order of the day. But when all the fireworks have been burnt, and all the feasts consumed, what is the state of affairs with which the Government will be brought face to face? Who will then occupy the places of the trustworthy, responsible revenue-payers who now own the land, and of the fairly contented and prosperous peasantry? We shall have a deeply impoverished class of rent-chargers, nominally landowners, but really retaining few of the privileges of the position, except that of being sold up under the Sunset law for default of revenue. We shall have all the effective control of the land, such as the right of transfer, &c., vested in a new class, consisting of money-lenders and other novi homines, utterly devoid of sympathy for the actual cultivators, and bound by no responsibilities towards either the State or the ryots—a class that will naturally consider its whole duty to begin and end in the payment of the Zemindars' annuities, and that will enjoy the fullest liberty to grind down the unfortunate cultivators. And what will be the condition of these latter? We implore Lord Ripon and the Government to consider this carefully before it is too late. The actual cultivators will not only be without rights of any kind, or "protection from the law;" they will be without means, without the credit they have hitherto been able to fall back upon, living from hand to mouth in time of prosperity, and in time of famine entirely at the mercy of speculating employers, who will have none of that permanent interest in their ultimate welfare which has hitherto been a bond of union between landlord and tenant. Is this a state of affairs that Lord Ripon can contemplate with satisfaction? It is true that the Government will have succeeded in freeing a large share of the landed property of Bengal from the trammels of the Permanent Settlement, so tantalising to those financiers who look upon confiscation as a fair source of revenue. It is true that the Government will be able to impose heavy taxation on the middlemen who will have become the real owners of the land of Bengal, with perhaps less inconvenience than would be caused by a downright open and honest violation of the Settlement. But will any statesman maintain that this trivial, not to say underhand, fiscal advantage will atone, either to the country or to the Government, for an impoverished and displaced land-proprietary, for a demoralised and pauperised peasantry, and the soil in the hands of middlemen?

Upwards of 150 six-year men of the 1st Oxfordshire Light Infantry, at Bangalore, have re-engaged for fresh periods.

At the Poona Soldiers' Industrial Exhibition, the first prize of one hundred rupees, in addition to other prizes aggregating one hundred and forty-one rupees, has been awarded to the 23rd Native Light Infantry, at Ahmedabad. Surgeon Mallins, M.B., is appointed pro tem. to medical charge of the 4th Cavalry, vice Brigade Surgeon Burn, A.M. and M.D., on furlough. Captain Gubbins, 3rd Cavalry, Mominabad, having vacated his appointment as adjutant, Lieutenant J. W. B. Meade has been appointed in his stead. Lieutenants Winter, R.A., and Wood, R.A., have been appointed officiating subalterns in Nos. 1 and 4 field batteries respectively. The rules for good conduct pay to native non-commissioned officers came into force from June 1 last.”

COURT-MARTIAL.—Gunner William Hogan, R.A., was charged before a district court-martial, with (1st) failing to appear at the place of parade appointed by his commanding officer; (2nd) breaking out of barracks; (3rd) losing by neglect his regimental necessaries; and (4th) drunkenness. The court found the prisoner guilty of all the charges, and sentenced him to be imprisoned with hard labour for 112 days, and fined him £1. Brigadier General Mallaby, commanding the Bombay District, has confirmed the sentence.

VOLUNTEER DINNER.—On Saturday evening the members of the E Company, Bombay Volunteer Rifles, were entertained at dinner at the Apollobunder by their officers. Captain M. R. Wyer occupied the chair, and there were also present:—Lieut. Col. L. H. Bayley, Captain Brown, Lieuts. Roughton and Lund, Captain Brown, R.A., Quartermaster Soundy, Mr. W. Adams, and about sixty members of the company. During the evening, Captain Wyer said they would remember that Lieutenant Roughton and himself promised prizes for those who made the highest scores in shooting their class on a certain day last season at Coorla. It was encouraging to see such a large attendance on that occasion, and one's only regret was that they could not all win the prizes. (Laughter and cheers.) Of the recruits Mr. Stacy was most successful, of the two-year olds, Mr. Howse, and of the veterans, Sergeant L. Crowley. He had great pleasure in handing over to them these memorials of their skill on that occasion. (Captain Wyer then handed to each of the volunteers named a handsome cup.) Before closing his remarks he should like to add that Colour Sergeant Melvin fired his class in Scotland, scoring 186, so that he was entitled to the honour of being the best shot of E Company for the season 1882-83. (Cheers.)

THE KIRKEE AMMUNITION FACTORY.—Mr. George Peaker, Chief Mechanical Engineer, Small Arms Ammunition Factory, Kirkee, has been dismissed the service of Government with a twelve months' gratuity. Mr. Peaker had nearly completed fifteen years' service, and may be said to have been the superintendent of the factory prior to the advent of Lieutenant Colonel Walker. So far back as 1875 grave complaints of the bad ammunition manufactured at Kirkee kept pouring in from corps and officials in Scinde, Belgaum, and Aden; but somehow or other the boxes of ammunition sent to head-quarters in support of the complaints always falsified them when fired from the fixed rest at Kirkee before special committees, as none of the cartridges would miss fire or bullets fall short! These complaints were repeated every year, until those from Zululand reached India through the Secretary of State, when searching inquiry elicited the faultiness of the manufacture; but it has only just been discovered that the cost of its production was nearly double what it should have been.—Pioneer.

HOME NEWS.

SHIPPING DISASTER.—Lloyd's Agent at Calcutta telegraphs that the Scottish Chieftain, homeward bound from Calcutta for London, was totally lost on Sept. 8 at the Andamans. The crew were picked up by the Maharani, and landed at Calcutta. The Scottish Chieftain, an iron vessel of 1,483 tons was built at Stockton in 1876, classed 100A1, and owned by Messrs. W. H. Ross and Co., Liverpool.

OBITUARY.—Lieutenant Colonel Frederick Donnelly Harington, of the Bengal Staff Corps, Deputy Commissioner at Goojerat, in the Punjab, died there on the 13th inst. He was a son of the late Sir Henry Harington, K.C.B.I., and entered the Army in 1854, served throughout the Sonthal campaign of 1855, and obtained a lieutenancy in the following year. He became Captain of the 12th Bengal Native Infantry in 1865, was promoted to major in 1874, and attained the rank of lieutenant colonel in 1880.—Mr. Edward Cordeaux, LL.M., of the Indian Civil Service, died at Bombay on Sunday, Aug. 26. At the time of his death he held the appointment of judge at Puna, and agent for the Sirdars in the Deccan, in the place of Sir W. Wedderburn, who is on leave in England; the deceased was about forty years of age, and the climate of India having affected his health, he was ordered home, but he died the day before he had intended to leave for England. The substantive appointment which he held at the time of his death was judge and sessions judge, Dharwar. He had completed nineteen years of his service, and during that period he had filled judicial appointments in most of the principal towns in the Bombay Presidency. He had also acted as Registrar to the High Court at Bombay and Legal Remembrancer to the Government. He was educated at the Liverpool College, and obtained a scholarship at Christ's College, Cambridge. He was for some time a pupil of the late Professor Palmer. The deceased was much esteemed, both in the service to which he belonged and by the natives, and his funeral at Bombay was very largely attended, most of the principal officials in the city being present.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The tenders for Rs.25,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on Wednesday, at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—in bills on Calcutta, Rs.1,52,300; on Bombay, Rs.1,00,000; and Madras Rs.10,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7½d. In telegraphic transfers on Calcutta, Rs.6,00,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7½d.; on Bombay, Rs.15,50,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7½d.; and Madras, Rs.1,00,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7½d.; or a total remittance of Rs.25,12,300. Tenders for bills on all Presidencies at 1s. 7½d. will receive in full, and for telegraphic transfers on all Presidencies at 1s. 7 9-16d. 50 per cent., above in full. Between April 1 and September 18 the total amount of bills and transfers sold reached Rs.8,81,75,350, and realised £7,139,970.

PRODUCE MARKETS.—Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson, say that there has been no important feature to notice in the markets, which are steady. The slight increase of demand last referred to has not made further progress, and the cheapness of money fails to stimulate speculative operations. Low brown sugars meet with more inquiry, especially Madras Jagghery. West India about supports the advance of 6d. to 9d. per cwt. from the period of extreme depression at the commencement of this month. Beet and refined have, however, receded, and are easier to buy. There have been heavy arrivals of China tea, and consequently rather large public sales, at which prices are fairly maintained. Indian teas meet a good demand, late high rates being supported, and the market closes with an animated tone. The coffee market is rather quiet. Rio and Central American descriptions remain firm at the advance previously quoted. Plantation Ceylon remains without improvement. Estimates of the present Rio crop are under three million bags, and the receipts since the 1st of July show a great falling off by contrast with the two previous years. The Santos crop will probably be an average one. Telegrams from the Continent and America advise a firmer feeling. Numerous cargoes of rice have arrived, and a few have sold at easier rates. The quantity of Ceylon cocoa at auction has been larger than in any week, since regular supplies have arrived here; and prices, although irregular, are about steady. White pepper is dearer, with a stock of imported less than for many years past. Sales of English make have also been affected at very high rates. Black is without further alteration, and other spices generally steady.

INDIAN AND CEYLON TEA.—From Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson's Ceylon Memoranda. Since the issue of our circular dated 9th August, 2,756 packages of Ceylon tea—embracing the produce of 50 estates, and representing about 150,000lb.—have been offered at the auctions. During the six weeks under review the market has been well supplied with fine Indian teas of the new crop; so far a strong demand has prevailed, the prices have been maintained at a higher level than usual at this time of the year. Notwithstanding the fine qualities with which they have had to compete, the Ceylon teas lately received have had sufficient merit to secure them keen competition, and the full advantage of the good prices now ruling. The best average—2s. per lb.—has been realised for an invoice of exceptionally rich and strong liquoring tea with closely made, but not tippy leaf, from Looecondura. The highest quotation—3s. 1d. per lb.—has been obtained for a tea from Gallebodde, combining a handsome tippy leaf with fine strength and flavour, characteristics which have distinguished all the recent shipment from this estate. Even higher quotations than these have been recently obtained for special marks of Indian tea, the finest Darjeeling selling up to 3s. 10½d., with many transactions from 3s. to 3s. 6d. per lb., while among recent averages realised, the following are noticeable viz:—2s. 3d. for 350 packages of Darjeeling Company's 1s. 9½d. for 850 chests of Assam Company's, 2s. 2½d. for 133 chests Gajilidoubah, Terai, 1s. 10½d. for 67 chests Budderpore, Cachar, 2s. for 75 chests Seconee, Assam. The general average values of the crops, however, are about equal.

DELHI AND LONDON BANK.—The half-yearly report states that the net profit realised during the six months amounts to £11,643, which, added to the balance of £450 brought forward from the previous half-year, gives a total at the credit of profit and loss account of £12,093. A dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum is recommended, and after crediting the sum of £3,000 to the doubtful debt account, there is a balance of £653 to be carried forward. The directors have pleasure in stating that the business of the bank during the past half-year has been satisfactory.

THE INDIAN CRIMINAL PROCEDURE BILL.—Mr. F. T. Atkins, manager of the Railway Service Press, Allahabad, editor of the Railway Service Gazette, and secretary of the Railway Servants' Association, is on his way to England, being despatched as a delegate from the working men in India to the working men in England, to obtain their assistance to prevent the Ilbert Bill from becoming law. Mr. Atkins has been addressing large meetings en route, in Calcutta, Allahabad, Lucknow, and Bombay. His lecturing tour in this country is to extend up to the time of the opening of Parliament in November next.

THE RELIEF OF LUCKNOW.—The annual dinner in commemoration of the entry into the Residency at Lucknow of the force under Generals Havelock and Outram took place at the Army and Navy Hotel, Victoria-street, last evening. FROM THE QUARTERLY AND WESTMINSTER REVIEWS

ON

THE KITCHEN AND THE CELLAR. THACKERAY. RUSSIA. CARRIAGES, ROADS, AND COACHES.

BY

SEPT. BERDMORE (NIMSHIVICH).

With Notes and Additions.

From The Academy, April 28, 1877.

"But the article of the number is one on 'The Kitchen and the Cellar,' a survey of British and Foreign cookery, after a lapse of forty years since last the oracle of the Quarterly spoke on the subject. The article discusses what elements of cooking for private-households in France we can import with advantage into this country, and finds the secret in a better understood herbal flavour in soups, the more perfect grilling of the French charcoal fuel, and the cleanliness with which fish, flesh, and fowl are thus grilled; and served with perfectly and separately made sauces. In connection with the cellar, the writer considers the universal introduction of red wines for dinner as important for the palate as the amelioration of soups."

From "Our Van," Baily's Magazine, November, 1877.

"The current number of the Quarterly Review contains a paper which will most certainly be read with much interest at the present time. The paper in question, entitled 'Carriages, Roads, and Coaches,' treats (and in a most exhaustive manner, too) of all sorts of conveyances, used for business as well as for pleasure, their various shapes and builds, and of the materials of which they are composed. The roads on which we ride and drive are also most elaborately discussed; and the merits and demerits of wood, granite, asphalt, and macadam most artistically defined. Tramways, the greatest nuisances, (barring, probably, bicycles) to driving and riding, are also fully expatiated upon; harness and other appointments are treated of in their proper places; and the whole concludes with a lengthened dissertation upon coaching, past and present; driving, professional and amateur; the times kept; the financial status of the coaches that are now on the road; a few good hints to both coachmen and guards; all of which will be found instructive as well as amusing."

"ZETETIC" TREATMENT OF MEDICINE, ON THE BASIS OF FREE PHOSPHEROUS.

This system, founded by Dr. BIRLEY after over half a century's experience and research, is commended to the notice of all seeking the restoration or maintenance of health. About twenty different compounds have already been tabulated suitable for most diseases.

The "Zetetic" treatment is particularly adapted to the restoration of health impaired by foreign climates, or exhaustive duties.

The "Ironised" Phosphorus is largely used by those whose profession entails arduous work.

THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EX-PRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions; and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and in the Voice of India throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE ILBERT BILL.

GREAT MEETING IN CALCUTTA TOWN HALL.

THE vast concourse of Europeans and Anglo-Indians of every class, which assembled in the Town Hall on Thursday, August 23, in response to the call of the Defence Association, to consider what further steps should be taken regarding the obnoxious Ilbert Bill, must have furnished a conclusive refutation of the belief, if it was still entertained by any one, that the feeling against the Bill had in any degree subsided. In numbers the meeting fell little, if at all short of that of Feb. 28; in enthusiasm it, if anything, exceeded the former meeting, while by the extraordinary bitterness of its tone, it bore startling testimony to the irritation produced by the morning's telegram from London. The hall began to fill before half-past four, and people continued to pour in long after the proceedings had commenced, at five minutes past five.

The following are the names of a few of those who were present :—
Mrs. Birch, Mrs. Shekleton, Miss Furrell, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Sedgfield, Miss J. A. Heysham, Miss G. E. Heysham, Mrs. H. R. Fink, Miss E. Solomon, Mr. Shekleton, Messrs. H. A. Garben, D. McKay, W. A. The CHAIRMAN said: Ladies and gentlemen,—The purpose for which this meeting has been called is so fully stated in the advertisement which you have no doubt all read, that it is unnecessary for me to say much. It is to be regretted that there is any necessity for this meeting—(hear hear)—and that Government, since finding that the overwhelming consensus of opinion with which is sought to justify the introduction of the Bill to amend the Criminal Procedure Code, has vanished, has not promptly, honestly, and straightforwardly abandoned the Bill. (Applause.) At the meeting, held in this hall, on the 6th instant, I said that after the manipulation which the debate of March 9 last had undergone before being telegraphed home by Government, the public would wish to see the opinions of the various Local Governments and local officers, published in their entirety—(cheers)—and I am sure the wish has grown stronger since we saw the telegram from home, published in yesterday's papers, stating that although the summed-up replies received from Local Governments in Bengal and Assam urge the withdrawal of Ilbert's Bill, those received from the Madras and Bombay Presidencies and the Punjab, North-West, and Central Provinces are against its withdrawal. We want to see the full opinions upon which this summing up has been made. Can any one doubt what the effect would have been, had the opinions of the local officials been published in full from time to time, as received? It would have been disastrous to the Bill. (Hear, hear, and loud cheers.) From what we have heard, I think it must be conceded that some of the principal opinions which have been summed up as against the withdrawal of the Bill are so condemnatory of its provision as to make its withdrawal in all fairness a necessity. We are told in the telegram that various modifications are suggested, but if reports are to be believed, it would be more correct to say that even the opinions which do not urge the withdrawal of the Bill show that it must either be withdrawn, or so changed as to be past recognition; so this great handiwork of our new legal member, executed to order with a view to prevent tinkering in the future—(laughter)—is, after all, such work as no decent tinker would be proud of; you do not mend a copper kettle with a brazen pan. (Much laughter, and loud cheers.) I have not statistics before me, but I think I am right in saying that, excluding the population of the Presidency towns and the Army, the European British subjects are greater in number in Bengal and Assam than in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies and the Punjab, North-West, and Central Provinces taken together, and we know that there are six Native Covenanted Civilians in Bengal, against one in the North-West, two in Bombay, and not one in Madras. You will have read in this morning's paper a telegram informing us that the Prime Minister of England has said that the opinions of Anglo-Indians are not judged by Her Majesty's Government to be the best—(groans and hisses)—as they are inclined to indulge in a spirit of ascendancy which, must be checked; that the dangers we prognosticate are shadowy and that opposition will subside when we recognise this! (Cries of "Shame, shame," and loud hisses.) It is with sorrow that we see a Statesman like Mr. Gladstone so misled and it is source of special sorrow to the Liberals among us but the present Government of India will stick at nothing to attain its ends. I believe it would not hesitate to wreck the country for an idea, and as loyal subjects of the Queen we must stand together and say it shall not be wrecked, and never rest until we see just men at the head of Indian affairs again! (Loud cheers.) You have only to read Mr. Bright's speeches—(groans and hisses)—and Mr. Gladstone's—(hisses)—to see how they have been deceived. This Ilbert's Bill is no party question, and if Government will deal with it honestly, it should never be one. (Loud and prolonged cheers.) I am a Liberal myself (loud cheers)—and it is painful to have to speak and think as we have to do of the conduct of the head of this Government. He has been sent out by Liberals, but we must be honest to ourselves and to the country. (Loud and prolonged cheers.) Mr. Bright made a calumnious speech against the Covenanted Civil Servants—(hisses)—here and the Indian Bar. (Hisses.) There is no obstacle in the way of the latter vindicating its honour, and its capability is undoubted, but if the former spoke out they would be purposely misunderstood, and they, with that loyalty they always show to those placed over them, remain silent under great provocation. Their silence we cannot help admiring! Compare it with the childish impatience of contradiction exhibited by those who ought to set an example! If our Governor General had been of the blood I will not say of kings, but of such as become leaders of men, he would ere this have spoken up, in defence of the finest Government service in the world. (Loud and prolonged cheers.) The Government officials are the pulse of Government, and through them Government acquires all its knowledge. This was admitted by Lord Ripon himself when he deferred further discussion on the Bill in order to consult those officials, and now, when they have candidly and conscientiously expressed their opinion, they are, because these opinions are adverse to the Government measure, maligned by Mr. Bright and sneered at by Mr. Gladstone. (Groans and hisses.) Is this the way to encourage honest men in doing their duty? (Hisses.) It is the way to make any among them, who covet high office above everything set their sails to the prevailing wind. (Sarcastic applause.) We have a letter from the Behar Planters Association in sympathy with our meeting to-day, and from a gentleman from the Punjab who had hoped to have been here. The latter points out that if Mr. Ilbert's Bill be passed, Mahomed Hayat Khan, who gained some notoriety during the Afghan War, will have jurisdiction over Europeans (hisses and groans)—that in the Punjab there is a custom called "sifarish" which permits natives to see their judge at his residence during intervals in the hearing of their case, and that as illustrative of the difficulty in the way of truthful evidence even in the Punjab, Government were defeated in the Commissariat fraud case against Rai Anoop Singh and the Tehsildar of Jhelum. He says if Government with all its power was defeated, how would a poor European fare against whom false evidence was brought? Government after losing the case issued a new Gazette, taking away Anoop Singh's title, and dismissed the Tehsildar of Jhelum. The working men in India have sent a representative to this meeting who will speak in the course of the evening. (Prolonged cheers.) I have received letters from the Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association, Calcutta, and Mr. D'Cruz, Head Master of the Calcutta Free School, which I will read to you:—

"To the Chairman of the Public Meeting held at Town Hall,— DEAR SIR,—I am directed by the board of the Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association to assure you of the sincere sympathy felt by the whole community whom they represent with those who have called this meeting, and to express their earnest hope that, if the Government of India is not prepared to abandon Mr. Ilbert's Bill for subjecting European British subjects to the jurisdiction of native magistrates, this meeting will be successful in delaying the passing of the Bill until the deep feeling stirred up by it in European and Anglo-Indian society in this country, and emphasised, it is believed, by the careful opinions expressed by a large number of responsible officials, has been fairly laid before and properly considered by the British Parliament.—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully—W. C. MADGE, Secretary."

The following was also received from Mr. D'Cruz, Head Master of the Free School:—

"To J. J. J. Keswick, Esq., President, E. and A.-I. Defence Association.—DEAR SIR,—There seems to exist some misconception as to the attitude of Eurasians with regard to the Ilbert Bill. My intimate acquaintance with a very large section of the Eurasian community, and the many opportunities I have of gauging their sentiments, both as the head of one of the largest institutions in India for the instruction of such children, and as a member of the board of direction of the Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association ever since its foundation, enable me to state emphatically that the community at large are as strenuously opposed to the Bill as the Anglo-Indians themselves, and that they are prepared, in this as in former political crises, to stand shoulder to shoulder with their brethren, from whom no artificial device of Government can alienate them by styling them 'Natives.' The policy of the present Ministry, as unfolded by Mr. Gladstone and persisted in by the Viceroy, is as detrimental to their interest as to those of the Anglo-Indians, and there is no alternative but for both to unite for mutual support. The 'spirit of ascendancy which must be checked,' according to Mr. Gladstone, by an alliance between the Government and the natives of India, is inherent and common to both, and the present policy thrusts upon them a position similar to that forced upon Russia by the alliance between the Government and the Ameer of Afghanistan. It is not possible exactly to foresee all that may result from treating friends as foes; but to prevent the adoption of such a line of action, and therefore its almost inevitable consequences, should be the aim of every right-thinking man, and is our united purpose now. I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant, L. W. D'Cruz, Head Master, Calcutta Free School." And a telegram has just arrived from Mr. Walker, Puneah:—"From R. A. Walker, Esq., to J. J. J. Keswick, Esq., President of European and Anglo-Indian Association, Town Hall. Heartily sympathise with meeting, deeply regret not present."

In conclusion, I would say that I think it is clear that there is great necessity for the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association strengthening itself, and I would invite all who are not members to become members, and all who have not already given donations to give them. You will find a book in the hall, where you can enter your names either as members, or donors, or both. I now call upon Mr. Robert Allen to propose the first resolution.

The speech was received with loud and prolonged cheers, which lasted some minutes.

Mr. ROBERT G. ALLEN then came forward amidst loud cheering, and said:—Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen—I have been asked to propose the first resolution of this evening, and it is with great pleasure that I come forward to give my small aid to a just cause. (Cheers.) The terms of the resolution are as follow:—

"I. That in the opinion of this meeting it is a matter of paramount State urgency, in the interest of the whole community in India, native and Anglo-Indian, that the Bill for the amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code should be at once withdrawn; but in the event of the Government not consenting to adopt this course, that it is, at all events, imperative as an act of public justice and of political good faith, that the Government of India should publish in extenso, and without delay, all the opinions, official and non-official, which have been submitted to the Government on the subject, and that the Government should abstain from proceeding further with the Bill until such time as both Houses of Parliament shall have had full opportunity of deliberately weighing and carefully considering, those opinions."

Now, gentlemen, such is the resolution which has been entrusted to me this evening, and I feel perfectly sure that there is not one single dissentient voice in this room. (Cheers.) I would call your attention shortly to the debate of March 9 last, when His Excellency the Governor General in Council thought fit to explain the policy of Government. On that occasion, amongst other things, he used the words that "this Bill will now, in accordance with the usual practice, be sent to the various Local Governments, and they will have an opportunity of recording their views upon it. These views will be sent up in due course, after, I trust, careful examination by the Local Governments into all the circumstances of the case, for the consideration of the Government of India, and we shall then give to the observations of the Local Governments and of the public which may have reached us in the meantime the fullest weight and the most deliberate consideration." We call this day upon the Viceroy to redeem these words. (Loud and prolonged cheering.) The pledge has been given that he will give the fullest weight and the fullest consideration to the opinion of the Local Governments, to the opinion of the officials and non-officials in the country. Gentlemen, we are told that these opinions have gone up before the Government, and we are told that these opinions result in a general consensus against this Bill. (Cheers.) We ask the Viceroy to give them weight, to give them consideration, and the only logical result of giving weight to the opinions of experts, of giving consideration to the grievous of men who have grown grey in the Government service is to withdraw this obnoxious and wretched Bill. (Loud cheers.) Gentlemen, at this stage, and at this time of day, and after all the writing and all the literature that has been poured forth on the subject, I am not going to trouble you now with arguments either, for or against the measure. You remember at the outset, Mr. Ilbert, when he introduced this measure, told us it was for the more impartial and the more effectual administration of justice. That argument was hardly started when it was trampled on. Again, we find the argument of anomaly, which was no sooner born than it came to an untimely end. Next we find the argument of administrative inconvenience put forth, and no sooner was that inquired into, than it was found rotten—(loud cheers)—and last of all this obnoxious measure is attempted to be thrust down our throats on the ground that if it was not done, it would cast a stigma on the natives. (Hisses and groans.) Gentlemen, as far as my poor judgment serves me, it has nothing whatsoever to do with the Queen's Proclamation of 1858. It has nothing whatever to do with a proper, honest, fair, and right advancement of the natives under the Crown. But it has to do with taking away our birthright. (Loud and prolonged applause.) At the meeting which was held in this hall in February last, if I remember rightly, we protested against the measure. We protested with one voice the universal opinion of the Europeans then present that we would not have it. I heard it said that this agitation is diminishing; but when I see before me this vast audience, I know that there beats in their hearts the courage of Englishmen. (Cheers.) I see that this agitation has life, and let the Government of India know that it will never give in—never. (Loud cheers.) Therefore, gentlemen, if there was any meaning in those words which His Excellency the Viceroy used upon the occasion of the debate of March 9, if he really meant to be guided by, to give weight to, and to give the fullest consideration to, the opinions that should come before him, he knew little or nothing of the country. He was unacquainted with the feelings, the habits, and manners of the people, and he was unacquainted with the lives of the Europeans in the Mofussil, so that he must always be dependent upon the opinions of the officials under the Government. Therefore, if these words had any meaning, they were a pledge that he would be guided by the opinions of the officials serving under the Government, and that he would give due weight to them. And now when we find from these opinions as a whole that it is a fact that there is a universal consensus of opinion against the Bill, what fair, honest, open course is left to His Excellency but to withdraw it and to bury it? (Hear, hear, and cheers.) Now, gentlemen, again when summing up the debate on March 9, His Excellency also used words in stating the policy of the Government of India, which words, if they were to bear any meaning at all, meant that he was desirous that the very fullest consideration should be given to this measure before it was passed, and that he for one would be willing to abide by the opinion of the House of Commons. He says:—

"I observe that the opponents of this Bill speak of appealing to the House of Commons. I am the last man in the world to object to such a course being taken. To the decision of the House of Commons both parties to this controversy must bow."

Now, gentlemen, if such was the declaration of His Excellency, when stating the policy of the Government of India, cannot we call on him to redeem that pledge, and put us in a position to put before the House of Commons the evidence upon which this matter must be judged? (Loud cheers.) He holds in his hands the very evidence that shows the justness of our cause, and upon the Government of India depends whether that evidence goes before the House of Commons in extenso fairly, fully, and freely, or in a summed up, collated form. (Hear, hear.) Gentlemen, the question is a grave one—the question is one that cannot be brushed aside. We make this demand, we insist upon it as a right. We appeal to this tribunal. Then let us place the tribunal in a position to judge. (Cheers.) But what has been the action of the Government of India? Up to the present moment, these opinions have not been made public. There has leaked out here and there something about them. We know that there is a consensus of opinion as regards Bengal. We are in doubt as to some of the rest. We have reason to believe that the Hyderabad opinion is dead against the measure. We have reason to believe that Burmah opinion is dead against the measure. But we have had no opportunity of seeing the whole of the opinions of the officials which have been taken, and we desire, and we claim the right, to have them printed in extenso. (Cheers.) Yesterday we found in the morning papers a telegram which purported to represent Mr. Cross, in reply to a question in the House of Commons, saying that the replies received from the Local Governments in Bengal and Assam were for the withdrawal of Mr. Ilbert's Bill, while those received from the Madras and Bombay Presidencies and the Punjab, the North-West and the Central Provinces, were against the withdrawal of the Bill. What does this telegram mean, if it is a true one? Is it the individual opinion of the Lieutenant Governor of the North Western Provinces, or is it the body of official opinion in the province in which he rules, which is opposed to the withdrawal of the Bill? What, gentlemen, can be the meaning of this ambiguous phrase? If it be said that the Lieutenant Governor of the North West is opposed to the withdrawal, then I can tell you that I can find no words in his communication with the Government of India on the subject, which is opposed to the withdrawal of the Bill. But, on the contrary, he says, there is really no pressing urgency for it. (Cheers.) If to propose a perfectly different measure—a measure which compared with the present Bill—is to take from it all its effect, all its sting, and all its life is to be called opposing the withdrawal of the Bill, then I make the writer of that telegram a present of the expression. (Laughter and cheers.) But is it, gentlemen, that they approve of the Bill? Do they mean to convey to the House of Commons, for I suppose that that telegram in some way emanated from India, that the Lieutenant Governor of the North West, and the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab approved of the principle of this Bill? I also am in a position to say, from having had an opportunity of seeing the returns on the subject, that the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, instead of abolishing race distinction, proposes a measure which will crystallise it, and keep it there for all time to come. (Cheers.) Or, gentlemen, perhaps it is a convenient mode of showing the complacency with which the Lieutenant Governors of the Punjab and the North West have attempted by this modification to save the dignity of the Government of India from the total withdrawal of the Bill. Like, I must say, Shem and Japhet of old going backwards with a blanket to hide their fathers' nakedness. (Laughter and cheers.) And gentlemen, if this obnoxious measure were passed into law to-morrow, and the Europeans were determined to oppose it, I speak of Bengal. Have the Government of India here any machinery to carry it out. Would not the very effect of it be to lower the prestige of the magistrate, the magistrate of a district, who, as you know, is the emblem, the centre, the moving spring of power in the country—would it not lower his prestige? He has no real power behind him, and if the European community were determined to oppose the measure, I need not suggest to you the thousand and one ways in which it might be successfully opposed, and the Government turned to ridicule. (Loud cheers.) Upon what force does the magistrate's authority rest? Upon prestige alone. Perhaps he has a few constables with a few muskets that would not go off, and that is all. (Laughter.) We had a case which occurred not long ago, in which Azim Chowdry, a native zemindar, resisted the execution of a civil process, and we know how disastrous was the attempt to carry out the process of the law with the aid of some policemen, who turned back and left the district superintendent alone before an armed mob; the result was that the law was not carried out, and Azim Chowdry was not arrested. And if Europeans were determined not to submit to the measure, I see no way in which the Government could really enforce it. (Vociferous cheers.) Any determined resistance on the part of the community to the measure would, as far as I understand it, paralyse the very best Baboo magistrate that they could place in the position. (Loud cheers.) To maintain, gentlemen, such a jurisdiction is, to my mind, an attempt to make a cone balance on its point. It cannot be done; when a resolution in Council is able to make the Ganges flow back to the mountains, then the Governor General in Council may hope by such policy to turn back in this country the tide of progressive humanity and subordinate the energetic Anglo-Saxon to the unenergetic native. (Loud cheers.) Gentlemen, what we all fear and feel about this measure is, that, should the Government be so unwise as to force it upon us, it can bring about only mischievous and terrible results. We did not court this battle; we prayed the Viceroy in this resolution to withdraw the Bill; but if he will force it upon us, then I see only mischief in the future. Gentlemen, it may be that you and I, who are assembled here this day at this meeting, may not feel the brunt of it, but I can look into the Mofussil and see the railway employé, the pensioned soldier, and the poor European scattered here and there, who have not the education, the wealth, nor the means of defending themselves when brought into trouble; it is on them that the brunt of this will fall, and if it is passed into law, then as surely as we are here this day, it will result in antagonisms and race hatred. (Cheers.) Therefore, gentlemen, our resolution has been framed in the interests of both Europeans and natives to have the Bill withdrawn. (Cheers.) If I remember correctly, the Lieutenant Governor of the North West has also informed the Government of India that there is no real desire on the part of the people at large in his province for such a measure. (Hear, hear.) Gentlemen, we have been told by honourable legislators that they have no sympathy with race pride, and that they are determined to ignore it in their astute combinations. (Cries of "Shame.") But, gentlemen, I can only say in reply that the laws of nature trouble themselves very little whether men sympathise with them or not, and they decline to be suspended because foolish persons determine to ignore them. (Cheers.) He must have read history to very little purpose who does not recognise that one of the most potent, and one of the most universally operative principles by which Providence has regulated and guided the progress of humanity has been race pride. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) He who sits in the heavens must laugh when He hears honourable legislators state that they have little sympathy with one of His laws. (Cheers.) What would be your opinion if you heard an engineer who told you that he was going for the future to construct his bridges without any regard to the laws of gravity? Or what would you think of the man who sat on the powder cask with a red-hot poker in his hand, which he was about to apply, who told you that he had no sympathy with the laws of combustion or explosion. (Laughter and cheers.) Race pride is a noble feeling, and is the best guarantee we have that the progress which has been already realised will be maintained; and, gentlemen, when men artificially destroy in themselves such a sentiment, and eliminate from their constitutions one of the noblest and most stirring sentiments which inspire the human breast, I can only say that for such people, perhaps, the Bill is a good and sufficient one. (Cheers.) But, gentlemen, I doubt not that you whom I see around me to-day are still in possession of the honourable sentiment with which nature furnished you, and let me urge you never to allow common sense to be obscured by what I can call nothing else than sophistical clap-trap. You are not ashamed. I hope to admit and to pride yourselves on the energy and labour which you have derived from your ancestors and you mean to transmit them unimpaired to your children's children, and it will then be their proud inheritance in their day to pass them on to posterity, to pass them on in the far future when the present Government of India and its advisers have retired to that limbo of oblivion which nature mercifully provides for its irredeemable failures. (Loud and continued applause.)

Mr. MURDOCK, in seconding the resolution, said: Mr. President, ladies, and gentlemen—The resolution has been so successfully laid before you by the eloquent mover that I need hardly say anything to detain you, except to express my fear that, judging from the past, this resolution will meet with no more consideration from the Government of India, or the Home Government, than the resolutions which were passed before. The resolution says, the Bill should not be proceeded with until the Houses of Parliament shall have had full opportunity of weighing and considering the opinions, official and non-official, which have been submitted to the Government of India on the subject. I confess I look for very little good resulting from our appeal to the Houses of Parliament. You will all have read the very curt answer Lord Kimberley gave the other day to a deputation of gentlemen, all of whom had been intimately associated with India in various capacities and were well acquainted with the evil that was likely to be wrought by the introduction of this Bill. To my mind, we have nothing to hope for from the present English Government, and if report be true, despite the consensus of opinion, official and non-official, which it is said is arrayed against the Bill, and which Lord Ripon has said should have due weight at the proper time—it is reported, I say, with that tenacity of purpose with which he is accredited, but which by some might be termed obstinacy, he is determined to pass the Bill into law. We have petitioned the Government here, and the Houses of Parliament at home, where it has been made a party question; and if the Government there are resolved to pass the measure, despite the able arguments which will be urged against it, and the powerful critiques of the newspapers, I am afraid the Government whip will be too strong for us. Having failed then in these directions, where are we to turn? Why, to the Queen, than whom a more just, far-seeing Sovereign never sat on the Throne of England. I am told, and I believe it is perfectly true, Her Majesty has desired the petition of the ladies of India, the petition which so eloquently and feelingly portrayed the dangers that might befall them if this Bill passed into law, to be sent to her to read, and when she has read that, she will ask for the petition of the men, the relatives or guardians of these ladies, and having read these petitions and well weighed their important meaning, her sense of justice will be aroused, and she will say to her Ministers "This thing shall not be." But if from any cause she is debarred from exercising her Royal prerogative, we must appeal to the masses of the English people, and measures are already being taken to make them acquainted with the facts of the case. Gentlemen, it is not you or I who will be affected if this Bill pass into law; it is the artisans in this country, and their wives and families, and a very large body of men here, to whom I will not further allude for fear my remarks might be misconstrued, and; gentlemen, if the people of England once take up this question, and say "This gross injustice shall not be perpetrated," it would take a much stronger Government than the present to withstand the voice of the people. No Government, however strong it may be, can afford to alienate the goodwill of the masses of the people, and despotic as the Government of India is, it may yet regret the day when it persisted in trying to force on us this most objectionable measure, despite the warning of its most able counsellors, for, as our chairman said when we last met in the hall, not in a spirit of menace, as a native newspaper has alleged, but as a warning, the application of the law would be far worse than its introduction. Gentlemen, in this room there are no doubt various shades of political opinion, some pin their faith on Messrs. Chamberlain, Dilke, and Co., others on the present Government, and some, like myself, hope to see the Conservatives come to the front ere long. Well, whatever our political opinions may be, I venture to think we are all Conservative on one point, viz., in the preservation of our rights, and resolute in our determination to maintain them by every constitutional means. Gentlemen, before I sit down, let me speak a few words on a more prosaic subject, pounds, shillings, and pence, or rather rupees, annas, and pice. I would refer you to the objects for which this association was started. To perform these functions properly, it is necessary the association should have an assured income. When asked to subscribe in the first instance you did so most liberally, for you were determined it should be no ephemeral institution, but one that should be maintained to give due effect to the rules to which I have referred. I have said you gave liberally, and if you were asked I am sure you would do so again, but such is not my intention, at least to any extent. What we want is to urge upon you to enrol yourselves as members of the association, to induce all you are connected with to do so likewise; those who are married amongst you to subscribe their wives' names, for we shall be delighted to welcome the ladies in our ranks, so that we may be able to say to the Government here and at home:—Look at the number of men and women resident in this country who have banded themselves together, to resist by every means in their power this most odious law you would try and impose upon them. Gentlemen, I am ashamed to think there are Englishmen, who, forgetful of their brethren in exile, would forge this chain upon them, and have forgotten the old refrain of "Britons never will be slaves."

Mr. F. F. ATKINS, the delegate of the United Railway Servants in India, in supporting the resolution, said that he deemed it a great pleasure to enjoy the privilege of supporting this motion. He stood there that night as the representative of a large number of working men and employes. (Hear, hear.) He held there credentials, in the shape of resolutions and telegrams, from different parts of India and from Burmah also, proclaiming their deep sympathy with this movement. (Applause.) In order that there might be no mistake as to the position that he occupied, he would read one or two of those resolutions to them. Here was one from a meeting which was held upcountry:—That this meeting of the European and Anglo-Indian employes of this railway and their wives do appoint Mr. F. Atkins as their delegate to represent them at the meeting to be held in Calcutta, on Thursday, August 23, for the purpose of taking further action to oppose the passing of the Ilbert Bill; and to authorise him to sign any petition which may be introduced at that meeting, provided such petition shall refer to or prevent the passing of the Bill; and that Mr. Atkins represent this meeting to the working men at home, working, it is understood, in conjunction with the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association Committee of Calcutta and England." There were two more which he would trouble them with, as he wished them clearly to understand the position, and because he was afraid that there was a little mistake about this in some quarters. Here was another:—"That this meeting authorises and empowers Mr. Aitkens to represent the employes of the railway of this station at any meeting which may be held in England, with the view of arousing the sympathies of our countrymen in Great Britain, to aid us in preventing the Ilbert Bill from becoming law, and that, while representing us in England, Mr. Atkins will work, as far as possible, in conjunction with the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association in India." These were his credentials. He had been nineteen years in India, nearly half of which had been spent in the service of one of the great Indian railways, and the remaining portion in organising railway unions which now extended from Burmah to Sind, and from the Himalayas in the north to the southern limits of this vast Empire. (Loud applause.) In organising these associations he had visited every railway in the country, he had come into contact with men employed upon these railways, and he was personally known to the majority of these men. He was in daily correspondence with a number of these, and he therefore ventured to say that he was in a position to judge what the views of these unions were on the great measure which they were discussing that evening. (Loud applause.) Those unions had been watching this movement for a considerable time, and they thought, as many others thought, that those clear, outspoken expressions from the former meeting would have influenced the Governor General and the Council, and that the Ilbert Bill would have been a thing of the past. (Hear, hear.) But they found that this cherished hope of theirs, their dearest wish, was not likely to be realised. They saw that their rights and liberties were likely to be sacrificed for a Utopian idea that might have emanated from the brain of a popularity hunter, but never from that of a wise and prudent statesman. (Loud applause.) They had, therefore, resolved that he should visit that country, see the countrymen of their great service, and tell them the truth. (Hear, hear.) To appeal to them and tell them that truth which had been withheld from them. (Cheers.) He would tell them the opinions and the views of the people of this country; he would point out to them the disabilities they laboured under. He would point out to them how great and terrible the danger was which menaced them; and he felt sure that the generous, impulsive, and industrious working classes of England would prompt them to take action in the matter; to give them their generous aid, their willing sympathy, their practical support in making this wretched Bill a thing of the past. (Prolonged cheers.) It had been pointed out that evening how much greater wrong the Bill would inflict upon the artisans of this country. How great would be the danger to these poor employes on the Indian Railways, many knew and no truer words had been spoken. He knew himself from experience, how great the disabilities and dangers were these poor men suffered from. He knew himself how often it was in certain districts, they may be some 300 to 400 miles away from any legal support, that they might be dragged to court, away from all assistance, and suffer the direst imprisonment. The men may suffer the maximum penalty of the law, and yet be innocent. Any lawyer and any magistrate would tell them that railway cases were the most intricate and complicated of cases. They required an amount of discernment and technical knowledge which was not seen in other cases, and in saying this, the speaker did not mean to cast any reflections upon English magistrates who, with all their knowledge of railway working and maintenance, sometimes made mistakes. Well, if Englishmen with all their training, possessed of all their knowledge chanced to make mistakes, what would it be to allow a native to be appointed to have criminal jurisdiction over the railway employes in the Mofussil? (Cheers.) Imagine for one moment a native magistrate who had no idea whatever of railway working, who had no idea of the working of an engine, or of machinery belonging to an engine, who had no idea of gradients, of points, and of the thousand and one things which were required to be considered in the case of a railway accident, how utterly incompetent would that man be to try such a great and important case? He recollected some years ago when he was in the G.I.P. Railway, there was a European driver there who met with an accident, and he was taken before a native magistrate, and that magistrate was really so ignorant of technical terms connected with the case, that it had to be postponed until some more competent man could be found to deal with it. He also recollected when the Chora Line was opened, there was a driver proceeding to Dinapore who was going down a gradient of one in 300. He saw a native on the line and did all he could to draw his attention. He blew his whistle, he sent a man to the front of the engine to shout to him, but the man would not get out of the way, and ultimately, in spite of all the driver could do, the native was run over and killed. That driver was taken before a native magistrate who asked him, "Why did you do this terrible thing, you must have been doing something to neglect your duty in this manner?" "Well," said the driver, in his rough way, "you know when there is a locomotive with a heavy train behind, you cannot stop it like you would a donkey cart. You cannot stop it by saying whoa." (Laughter.) "Oh," said the magistrate, "that is nothing; all you have got to do is simply to shut the steam off, put your break down, and it will stop the engine at once." Well, the result was that the case had to be postponed to enable some more competent man to try it. Well, that took place then, and it was more than likely that these cases would be more frequent in the future. Do not forget that Indian Railways run through districts called non-regulation provinces, where a magistrate was the law. Why, just fancy a native magistrate being the law and administering it! (Laughter and cheers.) Now there was one thing since this Bill had first been introduced, that had been increasing day by day, and that was race feeling, and all knew how it had found expression by law-breaking in this city, and on that ground over the Hugli. They knew that some of these drivers had been assaulted by their firemen running between stations, and one of them was nearly murdered. Now, in the exercise of economy in railway management, the Government in this country some years ago substituted two natives and one European in place of two Europeans and one native on engines, as formerly existed. So that at this time the European driver had no one to assist him if anything happened between two stations. Now, all knew how strong this race feeling was, and all could imagine how much stronger it would become if this Bill was passed and became law. He knew that there were a number of native gentlemen, all credit to them, who were trying all that men could do to calm and pacify their countrymen. But the poison had gone too deep, and it could not be done. The lower orders of natives had become so impregnated with this poison that there was danger to the European. He said there was danger to the European artisan, and there was also danger to the European employer. Imagine for a moment a heavy goods train in charge of a European driver and two natives. Suppose the natives assaulted the European driver between two stations, and a mail train coming in. There was a smash, the hissing of steam, and the groans of dying men and women. Who would be responsible for that? (Cries of "Lord Ripon.") This Bill not only imperilled their rights and privileges, but also their lives and trade. He read the other day an account of that meeting in London, and observed there of a man named Phear (?) who spoke to the effect that if this concession was made it would only be for the accommodation of a few thousand of sojourners in this country. Well, the speaker did not know whom this Mr. Phear referred to, whether to the civil servants, capitalists, or merchants. They knew it had been asserted, and he believed there was evidence of that, that if this Bill was introduced, capital would be withdrawn from the country. No doubt the influx of capital would be retarded, and this very means was necessary for the development of the country, and it was the means afforded for the employment of the poorer classes of Europeans and Anglo-Indians. If capital did not flow into the country there would be no work for them to do. Poverty would increase, and prisons and workhouses would become more populated than they were at the present time. He did not know who this Mr. Phear was, he did not know to what particular class he belonged, but he was inclined to think he belonged to the class of place-hunters and supporters who were once spoken of in the "Rejected Addresses" where the poet said, "That they were like little dogs who wagged their tails in expectation." Now, there was one thing more, and that was with reference to the European community of Madras and their president, Mr. White. He thought he was justified in saying that Mr. White had not got the support of his association in his declaration. Here was a telegram among his credentials, from Madras:—"You are authorised to represent us as protesting against the Ilbert Bill." He therefore thought that they might say that Mr. White was isolated in the matter, and he was very sure that there was no Eurasian in the country who would, for the sake of getting a definition of what he really was, sacrifice something which he knew to be a fact, and that was the rights and privileges which belonged to him, and which the Government were now trying to deprive him of. In this telegram it was stated that the spirit of supremacy must be checked. He did not know what was meant by that. Did it mean that this agitation should be discontinued, that these large meetings were no longer to be held? Did it mean that the Indian Government was to exercise the law against those who were assembled to protest? He was reading the other day of what Lord Holland said many years ago, that if the legitimate employment of meetings to obtain redress was prohibited, it would find vent in some other way; that large exclusions and the State could not exist together; that the State must destroy them or they would destroy the State. That was spoken at the time of the Catholic Emancipation Bill, and it was just as true now. He felt sure from the earnest voices in the room that if action was taken to suppress this agitation and to prevent these meetings, something serious, some alarming crisis would arise. If that was done, he was sure that, as Englishmen, they would resent it, that they would not allow that course to be taken, because the Government chose to exercise the power invested in them to prevent these assemblies to protest against their wicked and unjust action. (Loud and prolonged cheers.)

The resolution was then put to the vote and carried by unanimous acclamation.

The Rev. Mr. FINTER moved the second resolution, which was as follows:—"That a memorial be drawn up and circulated for signature by the council of the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association, and be duly submitted to H.E. the Governor General in Council." He said that this resolution was almost simply formal. They had lately suffered, as a community, an immense amount of abuse, and one of their good friends was rather dispirited about it. Mr. Bright had called them blatant agitators, but it should not be forgotten that years ago until he got to be a Privy Councillor, he was himself called so; therefore he thought it nothing Mr. Gladstone at last had condescended to take notice of them, and to-day's telegram meant defiance of the whole community of Anglo-Indians and Europeans in this country. They were judged without judgment. They were condemned without a trial. Their fears, which had not been fully published for the information of their fellow countrymen in England, were called shadowy, and Mr. Gladstone said that they were to be restrained. (Cheers and cries of "Never.") The point was the injustice. They were the only loyal and powerful community in the world with the British name which had no Parliamentary voice in London. They were in the hands of a despotic Government. They represented the "go" of an immense empire which they had conquered by numbers less than their present numbers. They represented the brightest jewel in the British Crown, for, apart from them, in what could the Government trust? What community could the Government be sure of, if a crisis should come either from within or from without? They were willing and bound to stand by the Queen and the great empire, of which they were a part. But the Viceroy, Lord Ripon, should recollect that they were the most powerful and wealthy of all similar communities outside England. Surely he should recollect that for a community like that there should be a full and fair hearing, before their case was decided. (Applause.) That was all they asked at present. But how did they stand? The last time he had the pleasure of standing there, he asked where was their voice, where was Calcutta? They had now got what Lord Ripon wanted, the expression of public opinion—(applause)—and although things looked against them, and individuals were allowed to anticipate facts to a great extent, still let them not despair. (Cries of "Never.") The battle was not fought out by a long way yet. They stood in a much higher and stronger position than any similar British community outside of India ever stood, except one. But he would not refer to separation. What they wanted was a hearing—a hearing from their fellow-countrymen at home. (Applause.) They could show that where they had had a hearing in this land with the non-officials, with the officials, and with natives even, they had won their way and conquered in every case; and here they met with a voice inspiring and leading them on—that of our Lieutenant Governor. (Loud and prolonged cheers.) Please don't. They will call it menace. (Laughter.) They were said to have tried menace; but every man present at the Council Chamber, on the 9th of March, must admit that there had not been such a bitter speech spoken on this rabid platform of Anti-Radicalism, anything like in bitterness and real although polite contempt, as the speech of our beloved and devoted-to-his-province Lieutenant Governor. What did he tell the Viceroy to his face. (Loud applause.) Many of those present had heard him. He told Lord Ripon that the administrative necessity on which this Bill was founded, and for which alone Europeans could accept it as necessary, did not exist. Could there be anything more bitter said to a man with an empire of 200,000,000 on his hands; could there be anything more reproachful of rashness and stupidity than that such a measure could have been brought when one of his own councillors told him that the thing which had convulsed the whole of his countrymen—the thing which caused an agitation so great—was after all not wanted? Mr. Finter thought that all who took the measure of the position of these two men—one with years of experience and universal respect, a man who was so cautious as we know Mr. Rivers Thompson to be, who was beloved by the natives, and honoured and respected by every one who knew him, who, in his place as a councillor of the Queen in the Council of this great Empire, should say to the face of the author and the supporter of this measure, that it was utterly unnecessary; that an administrative necessity did not exist. He took that to be a more bitter speech than anything that had ever been said, and even on this rabid platform. They stood now in a powerful position; they had a voice, and that voice now meant an income of over a thousand rupees a month, and a lakh and a half put by, with over 700 representative men joined together in number and power to support this agitation, and with 800 fellow-countrymen in England just as earnest in the cause—gentlemen who knew about the circumstances, gentlemen who were as determined never to give in on this point as any Englishman here could be. (Loud applause.) This Government has had to give in and withdraw so many things, that they here were unfortunate in coming in last, and just for the sake of not having to utter the stereotyped phrase, they determined to adhere to this measure. Look at the Suez Canal, the Afghan campaign, the Zulu mismanagement, the Madagascar mismanagement, or no management, if it can be called. They determined not to withdraw this Bill, because they had to withdraw so much. He had just been reminded that even the English Criminal Procedure Bill had to be withdrawn. (Laughter.) But think of the Suez Canal. (Oh.) think of the circumstances, so exactly like their legislating for this country. There was a certain French Company he was so fond of. The Government was very polite in respect of this matter. They were legislating for the trade of modern Tyre and Babylon united, and they thought of it like an office Babu; and so in the heights of Simla they legislated for European British subjects in just the same way. How was it that they did not call in Mr. Keswick, or a London merchant, for one or the other. But the last people thought of were the owners of the ships which used the Canal, and at last, even Mr. Gladstone himself was surprised (applause); and so the European community here should let Mr. Gladstone know that they also wished to surprise him, that they were in an analogous position to the London merchants, in that their opinions were not asked about what concerned themselves, and let the native papers say what they like about what concerned themselves alone. They had representatives even then; they had bodies of men who were respected and who were entitled to represent the views of the European community, and not one of them was asked what Englishmen would think about this Bill. And so in the other case, when Mr. Gladstone saw what a mistake he had made, he said the Bill would be withdrawn. Let them hope that they would get as good luck, don't let them give in. They had first to ask the Viceroy to consider the state of the case, and although in their own hearts and minds that was clear, let it be stated so that there should be no mistake. They stood by the British Government, because they were a part of it. All their interest lay not in menace, but in true and loyal support, and everybody was ready to do his best to forward the true interests of Britain, which they believed also to be the best interests of the natives. Setting that aside, and taking it for granted, as he hoped every member of the Government would admit, that they were all British subjects, and meant to keep up the position of the Government, there was no doubt now about what the public opinion of India was. From one end of India to another they had canvassed every voice in a way in which they and the Government had heard them, and the most loyal of those voices were their supporters in Calcutta, the Editors of the Englishman and Indian Daily News—(loud and prolonged applause)—but the more violent of those voices, though coming from men not young and hasty, had been loyally suppressed for fear of weakening the British Government. There had been letters sent which they had heard hinted of from those who knew, which would rather astonish Mr. Ilbert, speaking of measures most violent and coming from men who knew the country. They said "Anything rather than the Ilbert Bill." The chairman had just reminded him that there were some of them here on the table. He should never forget what one Government servant (not a chotawallah) said. They had got what a good Government ought to wish to have—the voice of the subjects governed. They had got the support of the community, and if they were not satisfied with the Council of the Association as their exponents, the Council would be delighted to let them choose another. They had converted the whole of India to their side; they had got the voice of all the non-officials, and they believed they had the voice of every official in this province to a man, except the natives concerned. (Applause.) They had also got, what they did not ask for, the voice of the ladies. (Loud applause.) The Government might, judge as English men should judge, by the voice of the majority; but here they were unanimous. All the experienced loyal servants of the Crown who knew Englishmen, and the natives themselves, even the understrappers, who had every interest to please the great majority, almost to a man in every province, and in this province to a man, were opposed to this measure. The Government had asked for voices as a guide, and it was given to them here. They could also say that where they had had an opportunity, they had voices in England too. They could see how strong their case must be when men gave up their time and money and with reluctance as loyal Englishmen protested against the measure of the Indian Government. Surely that fact should weigh with the Viceroy as well as any outsider. Then what remained. They had not time, and they went to the Viceroy and asked him to give them more time. They should see what had been done in India in opening the minds of the communities concerned to the importance of the question, and give them time to see whether they could not also persuade their fellow countrymen in England that the Government were wrong and the European community were right. If they had time enough, they had a good chance of doing that. They asked at present for time for a fair and full hearing of this question by the British Parliament. Would the Viceroy give it? That was a question in everybody's mind, and Mr. Murdock spoke the thoughts of two-thirds of those present when he said that he believed this meeting would be as ineffective as the voice of the last. (Loud laughter.) They could not forget about the cooking of the telegram. (Continued laughter.) They recollected also yesterday's telegram, and they knew as a matter of fact that papers had again and again been asked for at home, and they had not yet been published. They could not forget the summing up, that also wanted explaining, but they would not have it for a little time yet. All they wanted the Viceroy to do was to ask himself whether Mr. Ilbert, Mr. Aitchison, and the rest did not stand alone among the great mass of cultivated, experienced, and responsible public opinion; they wanted to ask him to take that fact into consideration, and be a little less self-confident. Modifications cannot be accepted loyally by this community. The council of this association had decided that they would not have a modification of legal principle, and any modification of it would leave the whole of the future uncertain, a very near future. It would simply be suspending the matter for a time. From such a beginning they knew what end must inevitably come, and so they said "Please pause at the outset, and let the whole Parliament of England have a full discussion before you take another step." (Loud applause.)

Mr. A. H. WALLIS, in seconding the resolution, said: Mr. President and gentlemen,—I am desirous that this meeting should have present in its mind the purport of the resolutions which have been placed before it to-day. I desire this because it is by the spirit and meaning of these resolutions that this association is guided, a spirit of deference and moderation, the only principle that constitutes the criterion by which the conduct of this association will be judged in the future. (Applause.) Undoubtedly, gentlemen, the question now before us, the amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code, is one which it would be impossible for any person, the most careless, to regard with indifference, and if approached merely as a subject of legislation, it must be viewed with feelings of the deepest concern. To speak of the difficulties and dangers which encompass it, as compared with any question which has previously occupied the attention of Englishmen in India, is to draw but a faint and feeble picture of the real difficulties which exist. They are indeed apparent to the most casual observer, but to him who has probed the question, he who has in imagination applied it to himself, to his friends, to his relatives resident in India, has found the difficulties thickening around him at every step, leaving him very frequently with nothing but a choice between two evils. (Hear, hear.) Formidable, however, as the position appears at the present moment, how much more so will it be, should the Bill be passed into law? (Hear, hear.) How shall we steer our way between conflicting influences and opposite extravagancies of race prejudice, beset on the one side with theories and anomalies, on the other with feelings jealously sensitive to any infringement of our right as Englishmen to be tried by our own countrymen? These contradictory influences are calculated alike to widen the breach which has already been made by the mere proposal to pass the Bill into law, and to cause a tension between the races which cannot serve to strengthen the Government of the ruling power. I hope I shall not be considered as misrepresenting the collective sense of Englishmen in India, and the general feelings which now exist, when I describe this encroachment on our rights as a hopeless endeavour to remove an imaginary anomaly, an unjust and unnecessary step on the part of Government to lower Englishmen in the sight of the natives, and a proposal to grant a privilege to Native Judges which will be both injudicious and inequitable, and likely to lead to race antagonism, if not to actual danger. (Loud applause.) There are, unfortunately, a few Englishmen in India who consider that we should be subjected to the tender mercies of Native Judges, and although I am willing to admit that those native gentlemen in the Civil Service who would rise to the honour of trying Europeans for criminal offences might be men with full honesty of purpose and integrity of spirit, still I contend that they could not thoroughly enter into our feelings, our high sense of honour, our dislike for all that is unreal, all that is untrue. (Hear, hear.) And are we to suffer this indignity without exercising any endeavours to stay the threatened evil? No, gentlemen, the Council of this Association look to you for your cordial co-operation, they feel that there are numbers among you who could do much to further the cause they have at heart, and they expect you by your influence and by every means in your power to assist them in their undertaking. Let us not allow this Bill to pass into law, and then deplore the result of our own lethargy. (Applause.) I think I am right in saying that the majority of highly educated natives do not desire this change, and do not look forward to it with any feelings of pleasure, knowing that while it detracts from the prestige of those who have done so much for their country, it will not add one tittle to their dignity, or one iota to their strength. Those who advocate the measure have no strong arguments to bring forward, and cannot explain wherein the native of the country will profit by this privilege, but those who are opposed to the Bill can prove the anomaly which would really exist, how we shall be judged by an alien race professing a different religion, with opinions entirely at variance with our own, who understand not our principles, and how Englishmen appreciate the blessings of freedom. (Loud applause.) Have we not seen native gentlemen admitted to the Bengal Civil Service without murmuring? (Hear, hear.) Have we not seen them honoured and decorated without murmuring? Have we not seen them placed on the Magisterial Bench in Presidency towns without murmuring? (Hear, hear.) But gentlemen, when we find them likely to be invested with powers unsuited to them and distasteful to us, I think we have every right to record an emphatic protest, and to pray Government to stay its innovating hand. I entreat you, gentlemen, particularly to bear in mind that, in the discussion of this question in this hall, we have endeavoured to treat it with due deference to those in power and to those whom it may affect. We, who live on the spot, can realise the nature of this Bill, and the disastrous effects which, if passed, it is likely to have on the future of the country; and I therefore have the greatest confidence in seconding the resolution, and in asking you to afford it your cordial support. (Loud applause.)

The resolution was then put to the vote and carried enthusiastically. Mr. A. B. MILLER then proposed a vote of thanks to the chair, which was occupied by Mr. J. J. Keswick, and the meeting separated.

THE "ENGLISHMAN" ON THE MEETING.

THE general feeling of those who were present at the great meeting of Thursday must have seen that it marked the commencement of a new phase in the agitation against the Ilbert Bill. A conviction has been growing up for some time past among all classes of the community that the time is approaching, if it has not already arrived, when action must take the place of argument. Mr. Gladstone's calumnious and threatening speech in the House of Commons has swept away the hope that has alone hitherto prevented this feeling from finding public expression, and it is not surprising that it was reflected strongly in more than one of the speeches yesterday evening, and still more strongly in the enthusiastic response which its expression called forth from the indignant multitude that filled the hall. It would be useless to conceal the fact that a marked and ominous change has come over the tone of the community. With no provocation but the studious moderation shown for some months past by its leaders, Mr. Gladstone has been guilty of the supreme folly of telling a powerful British community that they must be suppressed; and they are to undergo this process not because they have been guilty of any act of disloyalty, but merely because they have shown that they inherit a share of the spirit by which their forefathers won for themselves liberty and Empire. The initiative in menace has thus come from him, and he must not be surprised if the gauntlet is taken up. How unwilling the community still are to depart from an attitude of respectful remonstrance, will appear from the resolutions passed at the meeting. Those resolutions assert their claim to the last constitutional remedy remaining to them,—a remedy which the Viceroy has already assured them of his willingness to grant. We prefer believing that Mr. Gladstone's words were spoken in haste to speculating on the possible consequences of a rejection of a just prayer. But the fact that such speculation is rife wherever two or three Englishmen meet together in India, is none the less real and none the less grave.

THE SAME.

IT was an inevitable consequence of the altered condition of things that the tone of last Thursday's meeting at the Town Hall should have presented a marked contrast to that of the meeting of February 28. What the movement against the Bill has lost in hopefulness since the earlier date, it has gained in bitterness and dogged determination.

As far as the merits of the question at issue are concerned the only change that has taken place is, that the course of events has made the case against the Bill stronger than ever. One after another the arguments in its favour have been surrendered by its supporters, till the only tangible argument left for passing it is the fact that it has been brought forward.

The change that has taken place is this. When the great meeting of February 28 was held, the Government could plead in excuse for its action that up to that time it had acted in ignorance of the state of public opinion. Up to that time the public had not spoken, or had spoken only here and there. It is true that they had not spoken because they had not been consulted, or even warned of the intention of the Government. The Government had, indeed, sprung a mine on them. Still, the fact remains that the public had not spoken, and, so far as ignorance of public feeling can furnish any excuse for a Government, whose duty it was to consult public feeling and who had neglected that duty, the Government could plead that excuse.

But during the interval that has elapsed since then this excuse has been entirely swept away. From one end of India to the other the public have spoken, loudly, persistently, and with one voice, and that voice has been the voice of unqualified condemnation of the Bill. The working man, the tradesman, the planter, the merchant, the lawyer, the barrister, every branch of the non-official community, has joined in denouncing the Bill and urging its withdrawal. If this were all, it might be open to the Government to say, however unjustly, that the verdict was a partial one; that it was dictated by the selfish interests of those who had given it. But another great body of men have also spoken; a body of men whose selfish interests are practically unaffected by the Bill; a body of men who are trained and paid to help and advise the Government in the administration of the country; a body of men who for zeal, intelligence, and impartiality stand unsurpassed in the whole world; a body of men whose opinions on the subject were especially sought by the Government itself, the great Civil Service of India; and, so far as is known, their voice has been hardly less unanimous in condemning the Bill and advising its withdrawal.

But even this is not all. If it were, the Government might, perhaps, say: It is true that, under ordinary circumstances, we place the fullest reliance on the intelligence and impartiality of our Civil Service; but in this matter they have caught the excitement of the less intelligent and more successful interloper. Well, then, the Anglo-Indians at home have also spoken; men, the majority of whom have permanently severed their commission with India, have no selfish interests at stake in the matter, and are far removed from the contagion of local excitement. They, too, have spoken, and their condemnation of the Bill has been no less unanimous and no less emphatic.

Nor is even this all. All these are related by kindred and sympathy. But the natives, too, have spoken; and what they have said furnishes a more emphatic condemnation of the Bill than all that has gone before. What is it they have said? They have said, If we thought this Bill were final, we would scornfully reject it, as giving us only a tithe of what we demand. What is it to us that two, or three, or half-a-dozen, of our number should be able to try Europeans? We will not rest till all distinctions are wiped out; till we obtain not only a preference in all offices of trust and emolument, but an effective, a preponderant, voice in the supreme control; till we have a Parliament elected by ourselves; an army officered by ourselves; till, in short, British rule in India is reduced from a proud reality to a humble name.

This is the verdict of the natives on the Bill, and it is a verdict which is fatal to the Bill, because it says distinctly that they are prepared to accept it only as a small instalment of a programme which is incompatible, not only with Lord Ripon's pledge of finality, but with the maintenance of British supremacy itself.

Now we will not forestall the decision of the Government; but this we will say, that if, having thus ascertained the opinions of all who have any right or title to be heard on the subject, the Government still go on with this Bill, then they will deserve to be visited with a reprobation ten thousand fold stronger and more indignant than the just and strong reprobation they have already provoked.

We have said that we will not forestall the decision of the Government. But it is impossible to conceal the fact that, so far, the attitude of the Government has been one of stolid, we might almost say, contumelious disregard, alike of the feelings and opinions of the European community, and of the growing proportions of the Frankenstein it has called up.

Here in India, the responsible head of the Government makes no sign. Not so his superior in England. With a curtness and an asperity as little becoming his high office as the dignity of the occasion, he has informed the representatives of Anglo-Indian opinion at home that, whatever modifications may be made in the details of the Bill, its principle will not be surrendered. Now there is one astonishing feature about this declaration of the Secretary of State. It was made at a time when the opinions of the local officers consulted by the Government had not been received, and it therefore points clearly to the conclusion that the Government had made up its mind not to be guided by those opinions if they should be opposed to its preconceived views. In other words, the Government has determined to disregard the testimony of what Lord Ripon has justly described as its eyes and ears. And there is every indication that, in order that it may do this with impunity, it is determined that the British public shall not know, or shall know only when it is too late, what those eyes have seen and those ears have heard. Not only has the publication of the local opinions been delayed till it is no longer possible for Parliament to acquaint itself with their purport before its dispersal, but within the last few days an attempt has been made to contrive that Parliament shall be dismissed with a wholly erroneous idea of what that purport is. The Under Secretary for India has informed Parliament, not what is the verdict of the hundreds of officials consulted, but what are the "summed-up" opinions of certain Local Governments. He has told Parliament that the Governments of Bengal and Assam are in favour of the withdrawal of the Bill, but those of Bombay, Madras, the Punjab, the North West Provinces and the Central Provinces are against withdrawal, while the opinions of Burma, Kurg, and Hyderabad have not been received. He has taken care not to tell Parliament that the opinions of at least four out of five of the Governments which are against the withdrawal are practically the individual opinions of the heads of those Governments given against those of the great majority of the officers consulted by them. He has taken care not to tell Parliament that every European official consulted in Bengal, except one, is in favour of withdrawal, and he has taken care not to tell Parliament that, of all the European capital invested in the interior of India, at least five-sixths is invested in the two Provinces, whose Governments recommend withdrawal.

Now, it would be nothing short of a fraud upon Parliament and the British public if the Government were to proceed with the Bill under cover of this partial and misleading statement. The mere fact that such a statement has been made imposes upon Government the obligation, in common honesty, to place the whole of the official opinions in extenso before Parliament before attempting to pass the Bill into law.

But there is another fact which equally imposes this obligation on the Government. Lord Ripon, from his place in Council, has himself solemnly accepted the alternative of a reference to Parliament of the question in dispute.

The resolution passed at Thursday's meeting, in fact only calls upon Lord Ripon to fulfil a pledge deliberately given. To refuse to fulfil that pledge would be not only to commit a breach of political good faith, but to close the doors of justice against Englishmen in India, and by denying them the only constitutional remedy left them, to put a strain upon their loyalty which, if it proceeds from a conviction of their helplessness, is an act of most despicable tyranny, and if it proceeds from mere audacity is an act of most reprehensible temerity.

DELEGATION OF MR. ATKINS.

THE following resolution was passed at the meeting of railway employes and their wives held at Dinapur, for the purpose of taking further steps to oppose the passing of the Ilbert Bill:—

"That this meeting, composed of the European and Anglo-Indian employes of the East Indian Railway and their wives, do appoint Mr. Atkins as their delegate, to represent them at the meeting to be held in the Calcutta Town Hall on the 23rd instant, for the purpose of taking further action to oppose the passage of the Ilbert Bill, and do authorise him to sign any petition that may be introduced at the meeting, provided such petition is to retard or prevent the passage of the said Bill, and that Mr. Atkins represent this meeting to the working men at home, working, it is understood, in conjunction with the European and Anglo-Indian Association of Calcutta in England."

Similar resolutions have been passed at meetings held at Assensole, Buxar, and Mokameh.

We further learn by telegraph that meetings had been held at Ran- goon, Madras, Tundla, and Gossinganj, and resolutions passed authorising Mr. Atkins to represent the railway employes of those places at the meeting on Aug. 23.

It will be seen from the above resolutions that the statement of the Pioneer that Mr. Atkins has been deputed to England by the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association of this city is not quite correct. Mr. Atkins proceeds to England as the delegate of the great body of European, Anglo-Indian, and Eurasian railway operatives throughout India to their countrymen at home, at their express request; and though he will act in consultation with the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association, and have their sympathy and support, he is not deputed by them.—Englishman.

THE ILBERT BILL.

THE attitude which the Home Government has seen fit to adopt, with regard to the anti-Ilbert Bill meeting and the deputation to the Secretary of State, is to be deplored, not only in the interests of truth and justice in this particular case, but as an ominous sign of the times. Mr. Gladstone's Government, through the Secretary of State for India, virtually announce that they care nothing for agitation, conducted in the old loyal, honest, and constitutional manner; that the healthy maxim, ponderantur testes, non numerantur, is a dead letter to them; and that any representation to touch their feelings or influence their policy, must be based on an enumeration of heads, not an analysis of the brains inside them. The rapier is finally deposited in favour of the bludgeon. The meeting of June 25, in St. James's Hall, was a thoroughly representative one. The prospectus disclaimed—and the tone of the speeches justified the prospectus—any race animosity, any party bias, or any religious fanaticism. The attendance comprised representatives of all shades of politics, of every class of Indian Society. Men of the past, men of the present, soldiers and civilians, legislators and administrators, barristers and merchants, planters and missionaries, medical men and representatives of the press, assembled to offer a firm but temperate protest against a haphazard and uncalled for legislative eccentricity of uncertain parentage. The chair was taken by Sir Alexander Arbuthnot, K.C.S.I., whose liberal views with regard to raising the position of natives, and gradually increasing their share in the government of the country, were well-known. The following resolutions were put to the meeting and carried:—

1st. "That this meeting disapproves of the Bill now before the Indian Legislature, to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882; and desires to move Her Majesty's Government to take measures for the withdrawal of the same."

2nd. "That the Secretary of State be requested to receive a deputation to lay before him the grounds of objection to the Bill."

The immediate reply of the Government was not a direct one; it was merely a mot d'ordre to the workers of the Caucus machinery, to get up meetings at all the centres where that interesting institution holds sway, in support of Lord Ripon's policy; to "strengthen," as it was said, "the hands of our Liberal Viceroy," and by machine-made evidence to show that the great heart of the British working man was with him, in his noble crusade on behalf of the down-trodden millions of Hindustan. The whole question was at once, by responsible authority, made a party one; the one thing which the promoters of the St. James's Hall meeting had—even at the sacrifice of a good deal of power—most wisely and firmly resisted. The Caucus is a beautiful vehicle for the regulation of public opinion. The rank and file are ready at any moment, on an order from headquarters, to hold meetings on any given subject—from resolutions of sympathy with the man in the moon, to a vote of censure on the equator.

Besides winding up the provincial Caucuses, endeavours were made to elicit a counterblast of opinion in London. The usual inconsistency of Radical theories and practice was made very manifest in the construction of the meeting. After the whole of the Ministerial press had been set to work to prove that the opinions of Indian public men, of every class and of all politics, were tainted with self-interest and redolent of tyrannical narrow-mindedness, it was certainly curious to see the enthusiasm displayed for the few Indian names, which found themselves in company with those of the professed meeting-mongers, on the programme of the gathering at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. Sir John B. Phear we know; Sir A. Hobhouse, we know; but in what particular vocation of life has Major Evans Bell made any mark, and what is Mr. Alfred Haggard's special title to pose as a member for India? Mr. Haggard was a junior civilian in Lower Bengal, invalidated after about eight years' service, of which some five only were spent in this country. The rest of the committee were entirely composed of the professional element of Radical M.P.'s, whose one chance of keeping themselves before the public eye lies in their names being eternally advertised on posters. The names of Sir Charles Wingfield and of Mr. Robert Cust, who wrote vague letters of sympathy, complete the list of Anglo-Indian supporters of the Bill. Either Anglo-Indian opinion is worth something in this matter, or it is worthless. If the latter, then it is hard to see why so much rejoicing has been made over those few Radical sheep in the wilderness. If the former, then it is only fair to compare the names and status of those who oppose the Ilbert Bill, with those who support it. When a mass of educated and specialist evidence is given against the Ilbert Bill—and more against the manner and time of its introduction than against the abstract principle—by men who have known and studied India from all points of view, their evidence is apparently to be disregarded as interested and worthless. When a few men, known in India chiefly as crotcheteers, or not known to fame at all, give their support to the other side, no epithets are grandiose enough to do justice either to their moral or intellectual faculties. Accounts have been received by the last mail of the receipt of the petitions of the European community in India against the Bill—counting 14,626 signatures, and of the deputation to Lord Kimberley of the London Committee of Anglo-Indians, as resolved on at the St. James's Hall Meeting. Mr. Chamberlain has apparently been adopted as the standard of manners for the Cabinet. Lord Kimberley's reply savoured strongly of the consequential "snap" which is the characteristic of Mr. Chamberlain's oratory generally. After consenting to forward the memorial to Lord Ripon—which he could scarcely help doing—Lord Kimberley went on to say that the deputation must remember—or if they did not, they ought to—the arguments used by himself and his colleagues in the debate on Lord Ripon's motion. It would be unwise and unnecessary to repeat them. He would now state that the Government adhered entirely to their approval of the principle of the Bill, as stated in Lord Hartington's despatch of December last, and they had not the slightest intention of instructing the Government of India to withdraw the Bill. The reports of the Local Governments had not yet been received: but, possibly, modifications not inconsistent with the general principle might be adopted. How long it will be before the Local Government reports find their way home will be a curious matter to watch; also whether they are to be published, in extenso, or subjected to that smelting process which put such a totally new shape on to the debate on the Bill in the Legislative Council. One thing appears, unhappily, certain; namely, that they will not be allowed to find their way home during the session of Parliament. The Anglo-Indian Committee have tried to do their work in a quiet, constitutional way. They have their reward; they are received with small courtesy, and dismissed with less. They preserved their self-respect, and acted on the old-fashioned idea that argument was better than vituperation. They forgot the important fact that, since the Bulgarian and Midlothian pilgrimage of passion, the Liberal ear is so attuned to noise, as the only means of convincing expression, that it is unable to distinguish notes pitched in a minor key. The old days of courtesy and continuous policy are gone, when a Viceroy who was doing good work was not liable to be ejected summarily on a change of Ministry, and when Indian questions stood on their own merits, to be judged from a national point of view, and not condemned or praised according as they were advocated by the party in power, or by their opponents. The infallibility of Radicalism is as self-assertive as the infallibility of the Pope, but without the respectability which tradition confers on the latter. That argument is abhorrent, when it conflicts with the dogma of the hour, has been fully shown in the reception of the representatives of the Anglo-Indian Committee. There is a certain parallelism between the Radicals and Dominicans, in a story told by Froude of Erasmus. The Dominicans were trying to engage Erasmus to write down Luther. He refused. "Well then," said they, "if you will not write, at least you can say that we, Dominicans, have had the best of the argument." "How can I do that?" replied Erasmus. "You have burnt his books, but I never heard that you had answered them."—Civil and Military Gazette.

NATIVE ART AT THE CALCUTTA EXHIBITION.

THE preparations for the forthcoming exhibition at Calcutta are now far advanced towards completion, and there is every appearance of the most sanguine expectations as to its success being realised. No contributions promise to be more interesting than those representing the different branches of native art manufacture, and the reports which have been sent home on the exhibition held at Jeypore in the early part of the present year contain some useful information as to what visitors may expect to find in the Temple of Peace now in course of construction in the capital of British India. The experience of that exhibition showed that once the people realised the use and objects of the show, they hastened in large numbers to visit it; and, although the admission was free, the increase in the number of visitors from 200 a day to 5,000, which it reached before it closed, denoted a remarkable progress in popular appreciation. Although the exhibition at Jeypore appealed to a limited circle, there is no doubt that the example set by the young Maharajah produced a most excellent effect on popular opinion generally, both by encouraging native princes and chiefs to exhibit their treasures, and by inducing the labourers and artisans to inspect the most improved methods and highest forms of productions in their different crafts and professions. Surgeon Major Hendley, who took the most active part in the creation of the Jeypore Exhibition, dwells expressly on the "delight of the women" at seeing beautiful specimens of their own domestic labour or occupation.

Should the other princes of India contribute the loan of their treasures in anything like the free and generous manner that the Maharajah of Jeypore is doing, the success of the Calcutta Exhibition is assured. This ruling chief has determined to send a complete collection of all the art manufactures of his State, and as Jeypore ranks foremost among the States of India for the artistic excellence of its manufactures there will, of course, be a magnificent display of gold and silver enamels, pottery, carvings in ivory and metal, carpets, arms, dresses of honour, &c. Sir George Birdwood states in his handbook to the Paris Exhibition that "the enamels of Jeypore rank before all others, and are of matchless perfection;" and many of these articles possess, in addition to artistic excellence, a personal interest from historical association. There will in the first place, be specimens of the splendid carpets which Akbar's general, Man Singh, of Jeypore, who was his Governor of Cabul, brought back from Afghanistan, and which show no traces of wear and decay, although in constant use at the Jeypore Palace. The opinion of Mr. Kipling will be accepted as to their exceptional merit without hesitation:—

"There are, perhaps, no finer examples of carpets extant than those which the Jeypore authorities, with great liberality, have lent as types of the best of which this branch of art is capable. Time may have given them some of their peculiar harmony of colour, but the exceeding boldness, variety, and fancy, which change continually over many feet of surface, the combined delicacy and solidity of their texture, which has resisted decay for nearly 300 years, and their great size show that they must always have been among the choicest treasures of Persian art."

It may be stated that a reproduction of one of these carpets is in course of execution, in one of the Indian gaols, for South Kensington. The memory of Man Singh is also preserved by his enamel crutch, which was used as a means of support when standing for several hours in the presence of the Emperor. It is thus described by the official juror in his report:—

"This splendid specimen of enamel, possibly the oldest and best in existence in India, was composed of small cylinders of gold, fastened on a centre core, with a crutch handle of jade set with gems. Each cylinder was a separate study, chiefly of animal life, in which the birds and beasts, contrary to the present fashion, are boldly delineated in the purest and most glowing colours, outlined in gold; the opaque white, the azure and dark blues, and the reds were especially remarkable, the red the more so, as it has been supposed that it was not used so early in India as the days of Akbar."

The specimens of brocades are not only extremely interesting in themselves, including as they do several khillats or robes of honour presented at different times to the Jeypore rulers by the Delhi Emperors, but they deserve attention as representing a lost art. Jeypore used to be famous for its brocades, but neglect, or the gradual disappearance of the few families which inherited the secret of this art, led to the sudden stoppage of the production, and to the disappearance of brocade from among the sources of Jeypore wealth and prosperity. The poverty of patrons from the visitation of war, famine, or pestilence has proved a frequent cause of destruction to the pursuit and practice of art in India, and it seems probable that the Jeypore brocades ceased to be produced at the beginning of the century when the Marahatta raids carried destruction throughout the length of Rajputana. Something might be done towards the revival and preservation of this industry were the Indian Government to revive the thoroughly Asiatic practice of presenting faithful and deserving chiefs with khillats or robes of honour—a practice which the Russians have kept up in its full integrity in Central Asia. Many good authorities contend that the Calcutta Exhibition would afford an excellent opportunity for making a commencement in this direction, and that khillats would be much more appreciated as rewards than the titles of Rai or Rai Bahadur. What the Jeypore Exhibition did in a small way for one part of India that, it is anticipated, the Calcutta Exhibition will accomplish on a much larger scale for the Empire; and not the least useful fact, which it cannot fail to impress on the vast subject population of the Peninsula, is that, whereas former conquerors appropriated for their own use all the art treasures on which they could lay their hands, we are inducing and encouraging Indian chiefs and merchants to expose their possessions in an exhibition for the benefit and improvement of the less favoured peoples of the country. In no State, however, is a friendly encounter of this description more likely to awaken feelings of identity of interest and of a common origin than in India; but, at the same time that we rejoice at it as a symptom of tranquillity, we should not be blind to the fact that we may also be creating a new political force, with which it will be difficult for us to reckon.

The 2nd Battalion Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, Allahabad, will proceed to England by one of the first troopships of the season, on relief by the 1st Battalion Durham Light Infantry from Meerut, which will be moved by rail. The date of the actual relief of the former regiment at Allahabad is Nov. 7. The Durham Light Infantry are much under strength, being less than 600 strong.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Sept. 11; Madras and Allahabad, Sept. 12; Calcutta, Sept. 13.

THE mail that has arrived to-day is one of the most important that has ever arrived in England from India, for it brings the Gazette of India of Sept. 8, containing the much-debated reports of the local authorities on the Ilbert Bill.

THESE reports are so voluminous—occupying no less than 416 pages of the Gazette—that, we are sorry to say, it will be impossible for us to place them before our readers en bloc. We give, however, some extracts from them to-day; and we shall continue the process in future issues.

It is, perhaps, almost needless to say, that the full text of these important documents, now received, demonstrates the absolute and scrupulous accuracy of the summary telegraphed by the Calcutta correspondent of the Times. We regret to have to say that it also proves that the Reuter's telegram—already famous for its "error in transmission," whereby "205" opinions against the Bill were reduced, in the account telegraphed to every newspaper in England, to twenty-six!—was hardly more trustworthy in its facts than it was in its extraordinary figures. The Times has happily drawn the attention of the British public to the monstrous mis-statement that claimed the Lieutenant Governor of the North West Provinces as one of the supporters of the Bill. But a reference to the telegram, which we published for reference in our supplement of Sept. 11, will show that its whole tenour was misleading in the last degree; in fact, its wording was exactly in harmony with the monstrous mistake in the figures, but very difficult to be reconciled with the true figures.

Now that the reports are actually available, is it too much to ask of Reuter's Agency that its head-office should send a true statement of the facts to all those papers that published its misstatement? Some of the Radical papers in the provinces have not even corrected the amazing "error in transmission" in the mere figures themselves!

THE news from Afghanistan given by Reuter, in a telegram dated Simla, Sept. 29, and published in this morning's papers, is very serious—the more so that this inspired correspondent thinks it necessary to add the views of the Indian Government about it, which views are anything but reassuring when we remember their source. This is what Reuter's Simla correspondent telegraphs:—

"According to information received here from Afghanistan, the Ghilzai combination against the Ameer is increasing in strength. Fighting has taken place in the Northern Ghilzai country, and the Ameer's troops, numbering 8,000, were put to rout. Reinforcements are being despatched from Cabul and other places. The Indian Government believes the news to be exaggerated."

FRENCH opinion at Chandernagore, as expressed by Le Petit Bengali, rightly judges of the astounding statement that Lord Ripon intends to throw over his pledges of last March and ignore the adverse verdict of the local authorities on the Ilbert Bill:—

"Unless he would seriously damage his reputation as a Statesman and a man of honour, he has no alternative but to consider himself bound by the vote and put aside the unlucky project. To invite a vote and refuse to acknowledge it would be unworthy. The vote was honestly given, and should be accepted in the same manner. To act otherwise is to pose as a despot. But with a Utopian lessons from history weigh little."

PERHAPS one of the wisest things that has been said in regard to that "fusion" of Europeans and Natives, which was progressing so happily until Lord Ripon's destructive folly put a stop to it, appears in the same Franco-Indian journal:—"The fusion which may eventually be the work of time, not legislation."

WHAT is the use of a Viceroy? That is the question which will undoubtedly suggest itself to every Anglo-Indian on reading the following communiqué which appears as a Reuter's telegram in all the morning papers of to-day:—

"SIMLA, SEPT. 30.—It is uncertain whether the Ilbert Bill will come on for early discussion on the return of the Indian Government to Calcutta. The question has been referred to the home authorities."

WHY to the home authorities? Is the question of the requirements of the Anglo-Indian community in regard to judicial protection, a question of which the merits can be better judged by Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Chamberlain and the Caucus, than by the Viceroy of India and his advisers on the spot? If so, we would again most emphatically ask, What is the use of a Viceroy?

OF course, the real meaning of the communiqué is, that Lord Ripon hopes to save his miserable vanity, by pressing the Bill in some form or other, and then throwing the blame on the "mandate" of Dr. Crossbones of the Birmingham Caucus, and those intelligent Radical Clubs, whose noble fury has been stirred up by the long pole of Mr. Hodgson Pratt and Mr. Foggo. In that case, the question obviously becomes, What is the use of such a Viceroy as Lord Ripon?—and the reply should be, "To discredit the great Liberal party, by making it responsible for the insane crudities of the most ignorant and least reputable section of its Radical queue."

THE real facts are gradually coming out, about the opinion on the Ilbert Bill of Native politicians, as opposed to the silly and pernicious nonsense of the handful of ignorant demagogues who have been posing in Calcutta as the representatives of the Indian peoples. The views of the two greatest of living Indian statesmen, Sir Madhava Rao and Sir Dinkar Rao, are now telegraphed by the Times correspondent; and are exactly what we have all along expected them to be. Sir Madhava Rao's opinion is thus summarised:—

"Sir Madhava Rao was consulted by the Madras Government. He describes the principle of the Bill as perfectly sound, and regrets the opposition to it, but goes on to say that that opposition cannot be disregarded or made light of in the deliberations of practical statesmanship, and that it would not be the wisest course to pass the Bill at present. It is, he adds, only real firmness to be able to pause when desirable to do so."

THESE are the words of a true Indian patriot. They express, in substance, the views that were nobly and feelingly uttered by the Raja Siva Prasad in Council—those views which have exposed the Raja to the shameful insults of the Calcutta demagogues, but which are, we firmly believe, the real opinions of all the rightful leaders of Bengal, as well as of the rest of India. We still hope to see the British Indian Association exhibiting the courage of what we believe to be its inmost convictions on this most vital question. To those who have any intimate acquaintance with Bengal Society, it seems absurd to suppose that politicians of the calibre of the Maharaja Sir Jotendro Mohun Tagore, the Hon. Kristodas Pal, and the other prominent leaders of that really representative Association, should be found, on a great public question of this kind, ranged on the side of the Amrita Bazar Patrika and the gentlemen who burnt the Raja Siva Prasad in effigy, in opposition to men like Sir Madhava Rao and Sir Dinkar Rao.

WE advise any of our readers, who wish to have a good laugh, to go to St. James's Hall and see the entertainment of Mr. Charles Du-Val, entitled "Odds and Ends." Mr. Du-Val is well known for his literary and military exploits in the Transvaal. We venture to say this gentleman's powers of mimicry have rarely, if ever, been equalled. His personification of the racing man, Captain Rattlecash, the belle of the ball, Miss Bella Dashwood, and the scientific lecturer, Professor Dullbore, being particularly good. One great feature of the entertainment is the recital of "The Bells," which he gives with deep feeling and in a very graceful manner. Mrs. Besant's shrieking political address is particularly amusing; and Mr. Du-Val's sarcastic "aside" on the Affirmation Bill is always received with enthusiastic cheers.

The Indian Mirror says:—

"Mr. A. P. Howell, who has been serving on the Education Commission, will leave Simla next week to rejoin his appointment in the Behars. Somehow or other Mr. Howell's name is freely coupled with 'Britannicus' of the Englishman."

We are informed that the scheme for the establishment of a Punjab Guest-house, Museum, and Institute, in the immediate vicinity of London, which is being advocated by Dr. Leitner and the Journal of the Anjuman-i-Punjab is not in any way intended to compete with the Institute at Oxford; the objects of which are different, appealing as it does to the whole of India, and perhaps to a more Anglicised class of natives of that empire, than the project contemplated by Dr. Leitner of a Punjab Guest-house and Institute, the residents at which, when in town, will, no doubt, be glad to avail themselves of the facilities offered by the Northbrook Club and the National Indian Association.

With respect to the Indigo Market, the following is from Messrs. J. Thomas and Co.'s Price Current:—

"Herewith we give a detailed estimate of the various Lower Bengal Districts for this season, amounting to 15,800 maunds against 18,957 last year. A few concerns in Midnapore and Jessore are still at work. The season has been a most disappointing one all over Lower Bengal, but more particularly in Jessore and Purneah. It is somewhat too early to give a final estimate for Behar. Manufacturing news varies much; Here and there Khoonties are yielding well, but as a rule the final results will, we are afraid, be but indifferent. Benares reports are somewhat contradictory, but we expect the crop will about equal that of last year, whilst from the North-West it will, we believe, be considerably less, as the rain, which has this week been general in those parts, has come somewhat too late to be of much use. It is as yet too early to give a final estimate of the crop, but present appearances point to an out-turn of 125,000 to 135,000 maunds."

The same firm gives the following with respect to the Tea Market:—

"Further sales of tea have been held on August 30 and Sept. 6, amounting to 25,836 chests, and of these 24,713 found buyers. There is no particular change to notice in the demand, which has been strong for all, except common descriptions; these may be quoted a shade easier, whilst medium and particularly good and fine teas have realised better prices. London telegrams continue favourable, and August deliveries are, we consider, satisfactory."

The Englishman gives the state of the Tea Market for the week as follows:—

"At the commencement of the past week there was a fairly good demand for tonnage both by Canal and Cape, and several steamers and ships found employment at the rates then current. But towards the close the demand for Canal tonnage has ceased owing to discouraging reports from the home markets, and for ships there is not much inquiry either. Four ships have been fixed during the week, one for London and three for Dundee, reducing our unfixed tonnage to 35,000 tons."

The same journal gives the following obituary of the week:—Surgeon-Major Erskine B. Grant, A.M.D.; Major Phillpotts, R.A., Colombo; Mr. Henry Hodgart, Engineer, Messrs. Gaddum, Bythell and Co., Amraoti; Mr. Alexander Christian, of Putterghutta Indigo Factory, Bhagulpore District; Mr. Edward W. P. Edwin, assistant paymaster in charge of H.M.S. Philomel; Mr.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE following is the official summary of the reports of the Revenue and Agricultural Department on the state of the season and prospects of the crops throughout India for the week ending August 28:—

"The favourable change in the weather noticed last week has been maintained during the one under report. A fresh burst of the monsoon on the Western Ghats has brought good and opportune rain to the districts of the Konkan, Deccan, and Southern Mahratta Country. Parts of these tracts, however, continue in need of rain, and in Guzerat, where the fall was very slight, it is urgently needed. In Sind, according to latest reports, the river is six feet below last year's level, and the crops have suffered from scarcity of water. From Bombay the monsoon has extended to the Berars, Hyderabad, and Central India. In the former prospects are excellent, in the latter very much improved, and all cause for immediate anxiety is removed in most of the States. Rajputana is still for the most part without rain, and in many States much anxiety is felt as to crops and fodder. In the Madras Presidency the weather continues favourable, although in Madura, Tanjore, and Coimbatore the unirrigated crops need more rain. In British Burma the generally insufficient rainfall compared with the past year is beginning to affect the rice crop in the midland districts, but elsewhere prospects are good. Rain is also wanted in the Gauhati district of Assam. In the Cachar district, lying to the south-east of Gauhati, a heavy fall has again caused considerable damage. In Bengal the rainfall of the week has been generally good, and though more is required in places, prospects are good. In a few localities floods have done some damage. Good rain in the Central Provinces has greatly benefited the standing crops, which now offer hopes of a fair yield. Rice, though much retarded by the long break, is expected to return only a quarter below the average outturn if favourable weather continues. More rain is wanted in the Saugor, Damoh, and Jubbulpore districts. In North Western Provinces and Oudh the rainfall of the week, though fairly general, has been insufficient and unequal. The eastern as well as the western districts are now in need of rain and the kharif crops are being irrigated where possible. Rain continues to hold off in the Punjab, and the crops on unirrigated lands in the south eastern districts are reported to be rapidly failing. The supply of grass and fodder is also running short. Agricultural operation remains unchanged. Ploughing and sowing are nearly completed in Burmah and transplanting is well advanced. Rice and jute are being reaped in Bengal, and rice in Assam. Early kharif grains are coming into the market in Northern India. Harvesting is going on in Madras. Locusts are still reported from the Deccan. Cholera is generally on the decrease, but would appear to be severe at present at Nagnur. Fever is spreading, and small-pox is reported in several districts. Cattle-disease in mild form continues generally prevalent. Prices are for the most part stationary, except in Rajputana, where they are rising."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Times correspondent, dated Calcutta, September 30:—

"I have from time to time during the last eight months quoted passages from the Anglo-Indian and Native Press on the subject of the Ilbert Bill. I now add some selections from a Franco-Indian paper, which have a certain interest and value as coming from persons who possess local experience, while they have no personal interest in the controversy."

"Le Petit Bengali, a journal published at the French settlement of Chandernagore, says:—

"The tribunal to which Lord Ripon appealed last March—that is, the opinion of the local administrations—has pronounced a verdict condemning the project of the Government by an overwhelming majority. Lord Ripon has doubtless strong reasons for acting as he did; but what is to be the outcome? Unless he would seriously damage his reputation as a statesman and a man of honour, he will have no alternative but to consider himself bound by the vote and put aside the unlucky project. To invite a vote and refuse to acknowledge it would be unworthy. The vote was honestly given, and should be accepted in the same manner. To act otherwise is to pose as a despot. But with a Utopian lessons from history weigh little. Europeans in India form such an insignificant minority that it is indispensable to regard them as a distinct race and provide special laws for their protection. To mix Europeans with the rest of the people is to destroy the civilising agent. In vain do the heads of the Indian Administrations show Lord Ripon that no legislation is capable of abolishing race distinctions. The Viceroy will not be convinced, and wishes to repeat in India, an eminently Conservative country, an experiment which has failed wherever it has been tried. If the country is to remain under a European Government there is danger in withholding protection from the European and in not maintaining that ascendancy to which his race, and not conquest, entitles him. The fusion which may eventuate will be the work of time, not legislation.

"Meetings to protest against the Bill and to urge Government to withdraw it continue to be held throughout the country. The Assam tea planters of the Sibsagar and Luckimpoor districts have met and passed a series of resolutions condemning the measure, and among other important meetings have been those of the planters of the Darjeeling Terai and the non-official residents of Berhampore and Bangalore. It is a noteworthy fact, appearing from the published local reports, that two of the foremost native statesmen, Sir Dinkur Rao and Sir Madhava Rao, oppose the passing of the Bill. Sir Dinkur Rao's notes are made in a separate report, but his opinion is quoted in a letter of a magistrate of Agra. Sir Madhava Rao was consulted by the Madras Government. He describes the principle of the Bill as perfectly sound, and regrets the opposition to it, but goes on to say that that opposition cannot be disregarded or made light of in the deliberations of practical statesmanship, and that it would not be the wisest course to pass the Bill at present. It is, he adds, only real firmness to be able to pause when desirable to do so. Lord Ripon, however, does not seem disposed to follow this sound advice.

"The Government of India recommends the immediate commencement of a Western Deccan Railway from Poona to Belgaum, a distance of 242 miles. The Southern Mahratta Railway Company will probably undertake the work.

"The Secretary of State's sanction on the following projects is expected shortly:—First, a Nagpore and Bengal connecting line; secondly, a Bhopal and Whansi line, with an extension to Gwalior and Cawnpore; and thirdly, a line from Dhubri, on the Brahmapootra, to join the Tirhoot Railway. All these lines are important for famine protection.

"The accounts of the land trade of British India with foreign countries for 1882-3, as compared with the previous year, show that the imports amounted to 5,34,11,364 rupees, against 4,81,54,290 rupees, and the exports to 4,65,31,115 rupees, against 5,14,27,807 rupees. The countries showing the largest increase in the import trade are Cabul, Hill Tipperah, Upper Burmah, and Karennee. There is an increase in the export trade of Upper Burmah.

"There has been a deficient rainfall in Lower Bengal, and it is now nearly ten inches below the average. This is causing some anxiety for the late rice. Heavy rain fell in Calcutta yesterday, and if general will probably do much good. Mr. Blandford, the meteorological reporter, in a lecture which he delivered at Simla, attributed the recent drought in Northern India to the unusual amount of snow retained until late in the season in the Himalayan valleys, the abnormally high pressure of the atmosphere, and the long continuance of dry north-west winds.

"The Civil and Military Gazette states that a surveying expedition is to be sent to the Takt-i-Suleiman peak, sixty miles west of Dera Ismail Khan. When once a few trustworthy trigonometrical positions have been fixed there they will supply the means of mapping 50,000 square miles of important and almost unknown country.

"The Ameer's youngest and favourite son died of measles at Cabul a fortnight ago.

"General Kalal Khan, who was sent to punish the bandit Sadu in Zurnut, has met with a reverse. Reinforcements have been sent from Cabul. The Ameer is striking medals to commemorate his victory over the Shinwarris."

DINNER TO MR. JOHN RINTOUL MITCHELL.

ON Saturday evening, Sept. 22nd, a very interesting gathering took place at the Holborn Restaurant, London, on the occasion of a farewell dinner given by the press and other friends of Mr. Rintoul Mitchell, formerly editor of the Western Mail, Cardiff, of the Manchester Courier and of the North Times, to commemorate his departure from England to join the editorial staff of the Calcutta Englishman. Between forty and fifty gentlemen sat down to dinner. Mr. E. R. Russell, (Liverpool Daily Post) occupied the chair, and was supported by Mr. Joseph Hatton and Mr. H. Lascelles Carr (Western Mail), as vice-chairmen, and among others by Sir W. T. Charley, Common Serjeant of the City of London, Mr. Boyle (Daily Chronicle), Mr. D. Bremner (St. James's Gazette), Mr. A. Watson (Echo), Mr. W. Digby, C.I.E. (formerly of the Madras Times), Mr. Roper Lethbridge, Mr. W. Dawes ("Elijah Goff"), Mr. W. Saunders (Central News), Mr. F. Everill, Mr. Byron Webber, Mr. Robert Brough, Mr. Clarence Holt, &c. Letters of apology were read from Mr. J. W. McClure, J.P., Mr. S. S. Lloyd, and many other gentlemen. Mr. Henry Irving telegraphed as follows from Edinburgh:—"I wish my engagement would allow of my being present in person to add my God speed to those of Mitchell's other friends. Will you keep me a place at the dinner that I may show in this, the only way in my power, my esteem and good wishes to our friend, to whom remember me." Mr. J. L. Toole and Mr. George Loveday telegraphed from Whitby, expressing their regret that they could not be present, and their good wishes for Mr. Mitchell's prosperity. After the healths of the Queen and Royal Family had been drunk,

The CHAIRMAN proposed the toast of the evening, "Health, Happiness, and Prosperity to John Rintoul Mitchell." He said it gave him all the more pleasure to propose the toast because Mr. Mitchell's line in journalism was different from his own, and because Mr. Mitchell wrote on the opposite side of politics to that to which he (the chairman) was attached. Politics were, of course, excluded from their feelings on that occasion, but at the same time, if they wanted to judge a politician they must go to politicians on the other side for evidence of the impression that he made; and the same way if they wished to judge of the power and influence of a political writer, they must see what was the opinion of the political writers who were opposed to him. Many of those present were well acquainted with Mr. Mitchell's writings, either as colleagues or as antagonists, and he ventured to think that all of them would agree with the opinion that had been expressed by Mr. Duncley in a letter in which he described Mr. Mitchell as one who would be especially remembered for the argumentative, fair, and excellent manner—a manner which appealed to the highest intellectual judgment—with which he supported the opinions to which he was attached. (Hear, hear.) There were two kinds of political writers; those who could not take up the pen without exhibiting the spirit of the partisan and others who sought to place themselves en rapport with the great mass of those whom they addressed and tried to win over those to whom they were opposed. The latter was the kind of writer Mr. Mitchell had always been, and he was the type of writer that would always be honoured by the British nation, and would be honoured in every part of the British Empire. (Hear, hear.) The chairman then referred to Mr. Mitchell's treatment of matters of public interest that did not usually fall within the scope of a journalist's work, instancing the manner in which he had virtually acted as arbitrator in a strike of some 70,000 miners which occurred in South Wales during the period when Mr. Mitchell was editor-in-chief of the Western Mail. Mr. Mitchell was now about to enter upon a new career in a land that was identified with some of the greatest triumphs of English genius—civil genius as well as military genius. He (the chairman) almost envied Mr. Mitchell the new and vast problems to which he would have to address himself in his new sphere of labour. He believed that the same qualities which were the best for a journalist in this country were the best for a journalist all over the world—consistency, skill in dealing with facts and rapidity in making use of them, the command of good racy English, the power of briskly and freely impressing one's views upon the general public—these qualities were found in the best journalism alike of America, of England, and of India, and they would be exhibited in his new career as they had been in his past career by the gentleman to whom they were about to wish God-speed. The chairman concluded by paying a high tribute of admiration to Mr. Mitchell's character as a personal friend.

The toast having been drunk with "three times three,"

Mr. MITCHELL, in responding, expressed his gratitude and surprise at the extent and character of the demonstration that had been made in his honour. Never, in his most brilliant day dreams had he anticipated anything of the kind. If the occasion was to be regarded as his death in English journalism—it might be that it was—(cries of "No, you'll come back!")—and if it were, he could only say, "Let me die thus!" As he looked around and saw the faces of those who had been associated with one portion and another of his career, the events of his whole life seemed to pass before him, as they were said to pass before a man at the moment of his dissolution. It was a pleasure to him to see present members of the political party in Lancashire, with which he was especially associated. Politics necessarily formed the chief part of a journalist's daily work, and the presence of Sir William Charley, formerly the representative in Parliament of the borough in which he (Mr. Mitchell) was a resident, gratified him as being an assurance that the services he had tried to render to the party were not altogether unappreciated or forgotten. It was also peculiarly gratifying to have there representatives of the London press, with which he had been connected only a very short time, as well as members of the dramatic profession, a connection with which was so frequently found to be the recreation of journalists. He was also glad to see present some eminent members of the Indian press. He himself would enter India with somewhat the feelings of a child entering the British Museum—expecting to see many things that he would not understand; and all he could say was that he should bring with him a certain habit of observation and wish to acquire knowledge which, with a proper amount of humility and willingness to be taught, would be of the same use in India as in England.

Sir WILLIAM CHARLEY in proposing the toast of "The English Press," said that one of the earliest copies of ornamental penmanship that was set to him when a boy ran thus:—"To the pen, the pencil, and the press, we owe what neither can express." The lines expressed a pleasant truth, and he looked upon the present occasion as a kind of apotheosis on the pen and press in the person of Mr. Mitchell, of whom, he said, as was said of the dame that visited the sculptor, "He came but for friendship, but took away love." (Hear, hear, and laughter.) Mr. Mitchell's great success in winning the friendship and the love of those with whom he was associated lay in this, that he carried into his profession the spirit and the instincts of a true gentleman. (Hear, hear.) He (Sir William) had the honour of Mr. Mitchell's acquaintance during the time he occupied the distinguished position of editor of the Manchester Courier, the position of which paper at the present time might be gathered from the fact that its proprietor was chairman of the meeting which selected Mr. Houldsworth as the Conservative candidate for Manchester at the election which was now pending. If Mr. Houldsworth were returned at this election, there was no doubt the success of the Conservative party would be largely due to the respect and enthusiasm with which Mr. Mitchell imbued the minds of the electors of Manchester for the cause which he represented. (Applause.) Sir William concluded by referring to the great and increasing power which was wielded by the press, especially when directed by such men as Mr. Mitchell.

Mr. D. BREMNER and Mr. H. LASCELLES CARR responded, the latter referring to the fact that the best of the provincial journalists were being constantly attracted to the metropolis. He found some consolation from this, however, in the reflection that the dull men who remained in the provinces had a better chance of making a position for themselves than if the brilliant men had all remained. He had been more intimately associated, perhaps, with Mr. Mitchell than any other person present, and he could bear his testimony to the worth of Mr. Mitchell's character. As a colleague and as a general he stood pre-eminent among all the newspaper men he had known for the last twenty years—loyal, kindly, considerate in all his conduct to every one with whom he came in contact; one of the most popular men they had ever had in their town.

Mr. WILLIAM SAUNDERS proposed the toast of "English Literature," which was responded to by Mr. JOSEPH HATTON and Mr. DAWES.

Mr. E. A. MASON (Worcester Herald) gave the "Indian Press," and said that in his capacity of hon. sec. he had received about 150 letters, containing earnest recognition from north, south, east, and west, of Mr. Mitchell's journalistic ability, his genial good fellowship, and his sterling character. It might, therefore, be fairly said that those present that evening represented a large constituency, who wished to express to Mr. Mitchell a feeling of good fellowship, and an earnest desire that the change in his career which was about to take place would conduce to his prosperity, and that he might be successful in his new sphere of labour. In proposing the toast of "The Indian Press," he would associate with it the names of two of its distinguished members—Mr. William Digby and Mr. Roper Lethbridge. Personally, he could echo the words which had already been uttered to express astonishment at the rapid growth of the power and influence of the Indian press. He had seen a copy of the Calcutta Englishman, and he could certainly say that the paper was a credit to any capital in the world. It was clear that the daily press in India was wielding the same power and influence for good that it was wielding in this country. (Applause.)

The toast having been duly honoured,

Mr. WM. DIGBY, C.I.E., in responding, said:—It is but fitting that the Indian press should be acknowledged at such a gathering as the present, seeing that our guest is going out to serve on that press. But it seems to me that the secretaries have done rather a bad thing in associating my name with the toast before that of my friend Mr. Lethbridge, because by doing so they have put the corporal before the colonel, for while in India I was but a humble working journalist, he was Press Commissioner, having relations with all journals. He is to speak after me, and you will find that what in the corporal is but a weak and stammering word is in the colonel an eloquent speech. Then again they have made a mistake in that I appear before you somewhat as a blighted being. I see around me gentlemen connected with the press, and I think "If I only were what I once was, in a position to render the public that service which journalists in active work are able to render!" There was a time, and not very long ago either, when it argued considerable courage to speak in this country and in certain circles, on behalf of the Indian press, but I believe the late Examiner spoke the truth when it said that the journals of India would compare with those of any other country. The Duke of Wellington spoke of the journalists of India as "a ruffianly set;" the Duke of Argyll described the Indian press as "licentious;" Sir George Campbell declared that the writers were largely subsidised; but the greatest sinner of all in this respect came from the city in which Mr. Mitchell spent some years. Mr. Hugh Mason, speaking to the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, said "I never take up an Indian newspaper, and read the articles in it, but I feel sure that the writer has been subsidised." Indian journalists cannot be indignant at a remark of that kind, simply because it is so ludicrous. One has only to know Indian journalists to be aware of its absurdity. It is fitting, too, that the toast of the Indian press should be proposed when any body of English journalists is brought together, because from your ranks go forth the gentlemen who conduct that press. But it is not only that the Indian press gains from its contact with the English press; the English press and English public life to some extent derive advantage from the Indian. Of all our special correspondents, not one has exhibited more of the true journalistic spirit than Mr. Cameron, the correspondent of the Standard, and he commenced his career on the Bombay Gazette. While, how far English public life has derived advantage from Indian journalism may be seen, to mention one instance only, from what occurred at the last general election. There were no two pluckier fights at that election than those which were fought in the Elgin Burghs and in East Worcestershire. The Conservatives of the Elgin Burghs had to turn for a candidate to an Indian journalist, Mr. Maclean; while the Conservative candidate in East Worcestershire was another Indian journalist—Sir R. Temple. Sir R. Temple, a journalist? Yes! he was for some time the editor of the only quarterly review published in India, the Calcutta Review, of which my friend, Mr. Lethbridge, was also some time editor. And no one knows how many leading articles Sir R. Temple wrote for the Friend of India, for of course, "the secrets of the prison house" of journalism are never revealed. There is no great Day of Judgment for what has transpired in the editorial sanctum. Something has been said this evening about the difficulties and troubles under which journalists in this country carry on their work. Well, if it is hard work to be a successful journalist in this country, it is far harder work to be one in India, because their journalists are not merely critics of, but, above all else are opponents of the Government, in this sense, that they are no political parties in the Indian State. Journalists therefore necessarily stand in the position of an Opposition to the Government, but at the same time they are in this disadvantageous position, that, write they never so ably, or let them show that the Government is in the wrong nineteen times out of twenty, still, whatever they say or do, the Government there goes on just the same and cannot be turned out. There are no Houses of Parliament there, in which questions can be put; there are no public meetings at which speeches can be made defending the one cause or the other, and at which information can be given on the matters under discussion. Indian journalists have to feel their way in the dark, to grope for information, and the wonder is that they have been able to be of so much assistance to the State as they have been. Lord Lytton, when in India, did do one good thing for the Press—he also did what, I think, was one bad thing; but we will not deal with controversial subjects to-night—he established between the working journalists and the Government a Commissioner and intermediary, someone to whom the journalists could go and say "we want to write truthfully and fairly on the matter which is before the public; will you place before us in confidence all the information you can in reference to it, and we, as gentlemen, will deal fairly with what you give us?" In this way Indian journalists were able to get behind the scenes, and get to know what the Government were doing, what were their objects and intentions, in a way that they could not do before, and have not been able to do since, because one of the things which Lord Ripon did when he went out to India was to abolish the office of Press Commissioner. The journal to which Mr. Mitchell is going is especially worthy of consideration. No newspaper since the old John Bull was bought by Mr. J. H. Stocqueler and called the Englishman, has done greater service in the Indian capital than the paper on which Mr. Mitchell is going to serve. I have little doubt, from what I have heard of Mr. Mitchell, and from what I know of his writings, that all that is good of the Englishman of the past will be continued in the Englishman of the future. High as is the estimation in which, as has been shown by what has been said to-night, Mr. Mitchell has been held, I do not think he has yet been appreciated at his true worth. The chairman has spoken of him as a political opponent worthy of his steel; Sir William Charley has spoken of him as a political friend, and of the effects of his writings; Mr. Carr has spoken of his genial qualities as a colleague; the lady who sits by his side no doubt thinks that she at all events has estimated Mr. Mitchell at his true worth; but I venture to say that even she has not yet estimated him at all as he is going to be. Mr. Mitchell is going out to India not merely as an Englishman, but in words with which most here are familiar, "In spite of all temptation, To further serve this Nation, He prefers to be The Englishman"—not an ordinary Englishman like a Viceroy for example, or a Presidency Governor, but The Englishman. (Laughter.) I ask you, now to look on Mr. Mitchell as the Englishman of India—as prepared to maintain in a high-spirited and noble way the high traditions which Englishmen possess in our Indian Empire. I must say that of all the journals in any part of the world there are none which appear to me more steadfastly to

Mr. ROGER LETHBRIDGE, C.I.E., also responded, and said: I cannot but appreciate most highly the honour you have done me in associating my name with this toast, so closely connected as it is with the object of our meeting to-night, and with Mr. Mitchell's future career, in which we are all so much interested. When I was asked just now, quite unexpectedly, to join Mr. Digby in thanking you for the very kind way in which you have received the toast of the Indian press, I was consoled for my unpreparedness by two considerations—one was the happy thought of an earlier speaker, that it is very nice to be asked to undertake a task which you know someone else will most admirably perform for you, the other was that I can now have no excuse for boring you with a long speech. I find I have been selected for this honour because I was for some time Press Commissioner in India, and also because I was for seven years editor of the Calcutta Quarterly Review. But on this occasion, when Mr. Mitchell is about to join the editorial staff of the Englishman, I venture to put forward as still higher claim to speak on behalf of the Indian press, in that I believe I am the oldest contributor to the Englishman at present in England. I had the pleasure of writing a leading article for the Englishman in the autumn of 1868, and I have written for it nearly ever since. Mr. Digby has told you how large a part officials in India play in Indian journalism, and when I was a professor in a Government College in Calcutta, and subsequently as the principal of a neighbouring college, I contributed weekly, and sometimes almost daily, to the Englishman. The interest, therefore, that attaches itself to this toast in my eyes is indeed very great, both because of my great interest in the career to which Mr. Mitchell is about to go, and because I feel he is so well qualified to adorn it. I have observed that career—the career of an Indian journalist—from two sides; from the side of the active worker as a journalist, and from the official side in a very peculiar position. As the nominee of Lord Lytton to the peculiar and somewhat difficult office of Press Commissioner, I was able to study the question from the strictly official side. I very strongly feel the obligation that all those who had any connection with the institution of the Press Commissionership are under to Mr. Digby, who, though differing from us on the ordinary lines of politics, has yet been so high-minded as to acknowledge the great advantage to Indian journalists which was derived from that appointment. I was specially glad to hear those remarks from Mr. Digby, because an idea seems to have prevailed in England that the Press Commissioner was some kind of censor or oppressor. Mr. Digby, as not only one of our most eminent Indian journalists, but also as a sound Liberal, has been magnanimous enough to come forward and state how erroneous that notion is. Before the establishment of the Press Commissionership, the journalists of India laboured under the great disadvantages which Mr. Digby has just described to a still greater extent. There are no parliamentary debates in India, no questions asked in the Houses of Parliament. The discussions on public questions in the Legislative Councils are carried on almost in camera. Until the establishment of the Press Commissionership, journalists were groping in the dark; they had no actual knowledge, further than what leaked out in a surreptitious manner, of what the motives and the intentions of the Government really were. The deliberations that resulted in the appointment of a Press Commissioner originated in the time of Lord Lawrence; they were carried on under Lord Mayo and Lord Northbrook, and Lord Lytton, in making the appointment, was only carrying to perfection, by the aid of his just literary instincts and his administrative genius, the idea that had been evolved long before. The contest with the disadvantages under which journalists labour in India, as compared with their brethren in England, will, no doubt, prove very interesting to Mr. Mitchell, and I venture to say that the qualities he possesses are peculiarly calculated to enable him to surmount those difficulties. Living in Calcutta, at the centre of Government, he will have the advantage of being brought into contact with the officials of the Government, who will tell him openly and candidly what are the intentions of the Government in the action which they take; and though the Press Commissionership has been abolished, the traditions of its régime still exist, and the relations between the Government and the Press are more cordial and sincere than they were before Lord Lytton made his wise and bold attempt to solve those difficulties. On the other hand, there are some advantages which the Indian press enjoy, which Mr. Mitchell will, I am sure, make the most of. Journalists in India occupy a position of greater responsibility even than they occupy in this country; they are the guides and inspirers of an enormous clientèle in the Native press. The Native press take all their information, and a great deal of their tone, from the English journals; and, therefore, it is of the highest importance that men like Mr. Mitchell, who have attained a high position in England, should go out to guide that press. One of the speakers this evening observed that the provincial press is robbed of its best men to supply the London press; but on the present occasion I think it is a very fortunate thing that the provincial press is being robbed of one of its best men to enrich the press of India. A great responsibility rests upon Mr. Mitchell, and I am glad to feel that he will be able to discharge it, and that he will do credit to the country and to the press of England. At the present time great questions are being agitated in India, and we want men like Mr. Mitchell there. Another advantage enjoyed by journalists in India is that press men there have no party politics. They follow their own consciences, they get the best material they can upon any subject, they form their own opinion and they then have the responsible task of leading the whole of the newspaper opinions of that vast Empire. The Englishman possesses that characteristic in a peculiar measure, I am old enough to remember when the Englishman was called the organ of rampant Anglo-Saxonism; but that is no longer the case. For years it has been edited by no unworthy predecessors of the gentleman who is now about to succeed them. The articles in it have been written by men who have attained the highest eminence in the services in India. I could tell you of men whose names are well known to all of you who have been regular contributors to its columns, but, as Mr. Digby has said, the secrets of the journalistic prison-house are never revealed. The Englishman, being published in Calcutta, the seat of Government possesses an influence which perhaps no other newspaper in India possesses, and therefore I can congratulate not only Mr. Mitchell himself but the Empire at large, that a man so well calculated to adorn the position he is now going to fill has been selected to direct the future of that great journal.

Mr. BOYLE, the editor of the Daily Chronicle, in proposing "The Ladies," said he was glad to have the opportunity of testifying to the good qualities of Mr. Mitchell alike as a journalist and a thorough good friend. He was a man that the press of this country could ill afford to lose, but at the same time it was satisfactory to know that in his new sphere of work he would maintain the prestige of the English press, and do honour to it and to himself.

Mr. MITCHELL responded, and other toasts having been duly honoured, a very pleasant evening was brought to a close by a number of songs and recitations by several of the gentlemen present.

SELECTED ARTICLES.

THE FINANCIAL STATUS OF THE ZEMINDARS - II.

SINCE the publication of our article under the above heading we have received several communications from correspondents, asking us to afford something more positive than mere a priori arguments to show that the profit of the zemindars is limited to the amount of revenue paid by them to Government. One writer goes further, and invites our attention to a passage in the Honourable Mr. Justice Cunningham's minute on the Rent Bill, in which the profit has been estimated at a much higher figure. The points mooted are of sufficient importance to demand a reconsideration. The passage in question runs thus:

"There are 130,000 revenue-payers, who pay to Government a land-revenue of about three and a half millions sterling and enjoy a rental officially returned at something over thirteen millions sterling. This three and half millions of revenue is only half a million larger than what was fixed at the time of the Parliament settlement, viz., three millions. It is reckoned that, as the zemindars' share was fixed at one-tenth of the gross rent, 'the net rental' (i.e., share available for the proprietors after payment of revenue) at the time must have been between £300,000 and £400,000. While the Government revenue, accordingly has increased only by half a million, the landlord's share has risen from, say, £350,000 to nine and a half millions sterling. But this rental of thirteen millions is only an official return for Road Cess purposes, and is believed by many good judges to represent very inadequately the whole amount which in one way or another the proprietors receive. One writer reckons the entire amount paid annually by the occupants of the soil at between twenty-five and thirty millions sterling."

The remarks at the close of the paragraph quoted call for no comment. They dwell on mere guesses of unknown individuals writing for a purpose—of mere phantasms of fancy designed to produce sensational effects—and are not amenable to strict criticism. The reference to the Road Cess returns is the only point of importance, and they are just what Mr. Cunningham has consulted in a very perfunctory, careless manner. The returns have, we believe, not yet been published, but it is obvious from the figures given that he had seen them as submitted to Government by the Board of Revenue, and he sneers at them by saying that they were "only an official return for Road Cess purposes, and is believed by many good judges to represent very inadequately the whole amount which in one way or another the proprietors receive." This estimate of their value is, however, opposed to that of the Board of Revenue which submitted them under date April 10, 1879. The Board think that "with all their drawbacks, however, they may fairly rank as a most interesting collection of agricultural statistics." The drawbacks they refer to are connected with the reasons given, with the classification of tenures, and with other details with which the totals have no concern, and to which we do not advert. The only figures which concern us are those of the total of revenue and of the total of yield. The former stands beyond all question in the records of the Board. The latter is founded on the returns furnished by zemindars, giving in detail the names of every tenure-holder and ryot on each estate, and that under the penalty of being debarred from suing any tenant whose name does not appear on the returns; and under these circumstances they are, accidental errors excepted, the most reliable that could be obtained. Of course, they do not include the illegal cesses which have been euphemised by Mr. Cunningham under the phrase "one way or another," but these cesses are no more subject to tabulation than are adulterations, overcharges, short weights and measure, undue commissions, overcharges on landing and shipping costs, and other items in commercial returns in England, or France, or the United States of America. They are mere trifles which, for statistical purposes, are nowhere on earth taken into consideration. They must be bold indeed and gifted with uncommon hardihood of diction who would say that illegal cesses in Bengal triple or quadruple or pentuple or sextuple the profits. With imagination at beck they have rope enough and to spare. Anyhow the onus of proving them rests not on us, but on those who strive to controvert our position. Leaving them out of consideration, we find that Mr. Cunningham is in error in supposing that the total of revenue payers numbers 1,30,000, and the total of revenue is  $3\frac{1}{2}$  millions. The figures should be, in round number, 1,50,000, and  $3\frac{1}{4}$  millions. The exact figures are thus given in the Board's Revenue Administration Reports:—

These figures, however, refer to zemindaries strictly so called; they do not concern the Road and Public Works Cesses tabulated in the Board's report to which reference has been made above, and as Mr. Cunningham refers to that special report, and not to the Revenue Administration Reports, we, too, must abide by them. Now, statement A of the Board's Cess Report gives the total of estates at 2,42,416, or over ninety-two thousands in excess of the total given in the register of zemindaries. This is due to the inclusion under the head of Rent-free and other estates which do not come under the category of zemindaries, but yet of such a nature as not to be fit to be included under the term tenure. Tenures properly so-called have been given in the column for tenures, and they reckon at 11,35,222 valued at Rs.8,19,34,550. It is worthy of note that the Board's returns, both for revenue and cesses, refer invariably to estates, and not to the payers of revenue or cesses, while Mr. Cunningham uses the term "revenue-payers." There is, however, no return whatever published or compiled by the Board to show the actual number of payers, and it is difficult to conceive how Mr. Cunningham could get at them. The only inference, therefore, that can fairly be drawn is that he has confounded the number of estates with that of their owners. As a matter of fact it is impossible that the number of owners should be less than that of estates. The bulk of the owners are Hindus, among whom the joint-family system prevails most extensively, and ninety-five out of every hundred estates have many more than two owners each. Four or five to ten joint owners are common numbers, and it would be easy to show that many single estates have from thirty to forty co-sharers. Even in the case of small Brahmins and Mahatras, and other lakhs estates co-sharers are the rule and single owners the exception. It is true that in the case of some rich proprietors several estates come under one ownership, but these are few and quite exceptional, and cannot possibly reduce the total of owners to 1,30,000 from a total of 247,413 estates.

To turn now from the payers to the amount paid. The total value of the estates is given in the statement under notice at Rs.13,11,68,432. This is, however, the gross amount, and is subject to many deductions. We have in the first place to deduct from it the Government revenue amounting to Rs.3,77,37,226. Then a sum of Rs.69,14,587 has to be put out for the Road and the Public Works cesses. A third sum of three lacs must go to cover the Dawk impost, and one of Rs.78,73,105 for collection charges at the rate of 6 per cent. The amount actually paid is much greater, ranging from 8 to 12 per cent., and in the management of the Wards and attached Estates the Government pays more, but we take it at the lowest rate, because the Government has thought fit to fix it in its wisdom as the rate which they will allow in the calculation of cess accounts. Then comes the amount of unrealisable assets. The Government in the plenitude of its sovereign powers, with the aid of the ablest and the highest-paid collectors known on the earth, and having the Sunset law at beck, has never been able to recover the full amount of its due. The Board's Revenue Administration Reports year after year show the collections to come up to not more than 93 to 97 per cent. In the management of wards and attached estates, the collections made by Government officers under special laws range from 54 to 80, seldom the latter, and this is the case in normal years. For drought, famine, scarcity, the periodical writing off of revenue as unrealisable, if taken into account would lower the average considerably; but we have no data to hand to calculate the average rate. Anyhow, such being the case with Government, the zemindars must, as a matter of course be a great deal worse situated. They have to contend against recalcitrant ryots, bad laws, law's delay, heavy costs, three years' prescription, rats, mice, locusts, death, and all the contingencies of flood and field, and experienced persons are firmly of opinion that in the long run the zemindars do not realise more than at an average 70 per cent of their dues. But to obviate adverse criticism we will reckon the loss at 20 per cent.—an estimate which no zemindar will admit to be fair towards him. This rate would represent a total of Rs.2,62,33,368. It may be said that the zemindar should be more vigilant of their rights, and it is their own fault if they fail to realise the whole of their dues; but they cannot draw blood from stone, and if they do try to claim the full of their legal right, and institute too many rent suits, would be the actors of the poor-at-other's-cost in the person of collectors are ready at hand to denounce them as harsh, arted, cruel, and vicious, and the Government ever ready to gibbet them in its administrative resolutions as monsters of cruelty. The Government, in its administrative canonicals, preaches moderation benevolence, kindness to ryots and all the other virtues of the Scriptures, and having thereby secured three years' respite, changes its coat and as legislators decrees a wholesale fine on kindness by washing off all liabilities of the ryot under the law of three years' prescription. For tradesmen who sell chicory for coffee and salt for sugar the prescription is six years, but for zemindars it is three, following the worst possible laws for the easy recovery of rent during the legal period. It is but reasonable and fair that the result of the moral flappers and bad laws should recoil on Government. The balance left after the above deductions represents the profits of 2,42,000 estates, but of these the 1,50,000 zemindary estates include, as shown in our last article, a great number of very small estates yielding from R.1 to Rs.83 per year, the richer classes being represented by barely 10,000. If we take the profits of the 92,000 estates to be the same as those of the 1,50,000 zemindaries, technically so called, the result would show that those experienced officers who reckon the profits of zemindars to be between twenty-five and thirty crores have, we will not say shot with a long bow, but drawn a trifle too largely on their imagination. But to tabulate the figures—

|   | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | 3,47,50,161  |

The results here arrived at are in keeping with the returns of the Income Tax Administration as far as they go. The bulk of the zemindaries are, as shown in our last article, of small extent, valued at from R.1 to Rs.180, whereas the Income Tax collectors and assessors took no note of agricultural holdings and estates of less value than Rs.200, and therefore there can be no exact concord; but the figures given in the Board's report of November 14 1865, on the administration of the Income Tax in the Mofussil, from 1860-61 to 1863-64, and the Report of Mr. Grote, President of the Income Tax Commission for Calcutta and the suburbs, which have been summed below in a tabular form, show that the total of tax-payers under Schedule I, was 2,13,754, and the duty they paid amounted to Rs.30,35,894, which, calculated at the rate of 4 per cent. duty, give a total profit of Rs.1,21,47,576—nothing like 25 to 30 crores.

It might be said that it is a matter of perfect indifference to Government whether the whole of the profits remains with the zemindar or is divided between him and the Talukdar. Had there been no zemindar and no subinfeudation, the whole of the profits would have gone to Government. This is no doubt true as an argument, and would show well on paper. But the Government has a higher duty to perform than to realise the highest revenue possible. It is the protection of the people and the promotion of their welfare, that primarily claims its attention, and how far that is consistent with the extortion of the highest revenue is quite another question. Certain it is that the experiment of ryotwari settlement has been tried and found to be sadly wanting. It has impoverished the people concerned, lowered their vitality, and killed them like rotten sheep under the slightest touch of adversity. These facts have engaged the attention of our legislators, year after year, and they have been busy in devising Dakkhan Ryots Relief Bills, Agricultural Banks, and what not, but no relief has yet been afforded to the sufferers, and such will continue to be the case until taxation is specially lowered. This misery has not yet fallen on Bengal, and those who advocate the suppression of the Bengal system are trying really to reduce the ryots of Bengal to the condition of the ryots of the Dakkhan. May God avert the mischief which they propose to inflict!

THE INDIAN CRIMINAL PROCEDURE BILL.

THE following is the report of Sir Alfred Lyall, the Lieutenant Governor of the North West Provinces, on the Bill:—

"From the Secretary to Government, North West Provinces and Oudh, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Legislative Department.

"Naini Tal, July 3 1883.

"Judicial Department (Criminal).

"Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge receipt of your letter, No. 26C., dated March 17, 1883, forwarding copies of the papers noted on the margin, and to submit, for the information of the Government of India, the opinion of the Lieutenant Governor and Chief Commissioner on the provisions of the Bill, together with the opinions of the Honourable Judges of the High Court, Allahabad, and of some other persons consulted on the subject.

"2. The Bill is intended to amend Sections 22, 25, 443, 444, 450, and part of 459 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act 10 of 1882), and its effect up to the existing law would appear to be as follows:—

"(1) As Section 22 of the Code of Criminal Procedure now stands, the Government can appoint any European British subject, official or non-official, and if official, of any branch of the Government service, to be a justice of the peace for its territories. Under the law as amended by the Bill, the primary qualification for investment with powers of a justice of the peace would no longer be one of the nationality and race descent, but would become purely official within certain branches of the public service; that is, no one could be appointed a justice of the peace who was not a magistrate of the first class, and was not (a) a member of the Covenanted Civil Service, or (b) a member of the Native Civil Service, constituted under 33 Vic., cap. 3, or (c) an assistant commissioner in a non-regulation Province, or (d) a cantonment magistrate; and no non-official person, or member of any service under the Government other than those specified above could be appointed a justice of the peace.

"(2) Under Section 25, as amended, all sessions judges and district magistrates would become justices of the peace for the territories administered by the Local Government under which they are serving.

"(3) It is proposed to alter Section 443 so that any magistrate of the first class who is also a justice of the peace would be competent to try European British subjects; and the effect of this alteration, taken with the addition proposed to Section 25 and with Section 446, would be that a district magistrate, whether a European or a native, would be empowered to try European British subjects, and on conviction to sentence them to not more than three months' imprisonment, or to fine of not more than Rs. 1,000, or to both.

"(4) While sessions judges, whether European or native would become, under Section 25 as amended, competent to try and sentence European British subjects, assistant sessions judges, whether European or native, would, under Section 444 as amended, not be competent to do so until they had held office for three years, and had been specially empowered by the Local Government.

"(5) Section 450 and part of Section 459 are proposed for repeal, because by the preceding amendments all sessions judges, whether European or native, would, in virtue of office, be justices of the peace, and the disability of native magistrates and sessions judges to exercise the powers of a justice of the peace would be removed.

"3. The object of these amendments, as stated by the Government of India, is to settle the question of jurisdiction over European British subjects outside the Presidency towns in such a way as to remove at once and completely from the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act 10 of 1882) every judicial disqualification based merely on race distinction. The Lieutenant Governor, in submitting his views upon this proposition, desires that he may be understood to be treating the various points involved only as they relate to the North Western Provinces and Oudh. The determination of them by the Government of India may depend materially upon considerations of a general character, and upon the circumstances, political and administrative, of the different provinces of British India, and Sir Alfred Lyall would wish only to offer an opinion upon the expediency or necessity of introducing the Bill's provisions into the provinces under his administration.

"4. I am to say, then, that the Lieutenant Governor does not think it expedient in these provinces to throw open to native magistrates the jurisdiction over European British subjects to the extent that would be permissible under the Bill. The four classes of persons specified in Section 1 of the Bill include, taken together, very nearly the total number of the civil officers (excluding the subordinate executive services) in these provinces. According to the constitution of the judicial service, there is in each district only a limited staff of officers at any time available for disposing of the important criminal work of the provinces. It follows that very junior officers must occasionally be invested with the powers of a first-class magistrate, their integrity and energy and the supervision of the superior courts being accepted as security for the proper exercise of these powers. The proposed magisterial qualification of eligibility for appointment to be a justice of the peace—namely, that the officer to be appointed must be a magistrate of the first class—is therefore a very variable test of special fitness to exercise that jurisdiction. It is true that the qualification is a preliminary one only, and that the Local Government may select from among the magistrates possessing it the only whom it thinks fit for appointment under Section 1 of the Bill. But the Lieutenant Governor now doubts whether there is a sufficient stability or security in this discretionary power; since the correspondence and discussions that have taken place regarding the Bill have elicited great diversity of opinion, and it is not impossible that the Local Government might, at different times, have widely different views as to the proper standard of personal fitness, and as to the various considerations unavoidably and indisputably connected in all countries with marked distinctions of race. Seeing, then, that the broader and more attractive any principle is in its abstract form, the greater is the need for prudence in its application, the Lieutenant Governor would now advise, in this instance, that the Legislature lay down a less flexible rule than that provided in the Bill, and limit more definitely the application of a principle which, reaching very far, may easily touch feelings and prepossessions that cannot be ignored.

"* Bill to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, so far as it relates to the exercise of jurisdiction over European British subjects, with statement of objects and reasons."

"5. In regard, moreover, to the last of the four classes named in Section 1, it is understood that any person, without restriction as to service or class, military or civil, who is invested with the powers of a magistrate of the first class within a cantonment, becomes the cantonment magistrate. If this be so, then, not only for the reasons stated above, but also because cantonment magistrates are particularly intended to exercise authority over soldiers and others subject, more or less, to the rules and customs of military discipline, and are in constant relation with military commandants, the Lieutenant Governor would not advise any change of law that might permit full jurisdiction in cantonments to be given to others besides European British subjects. And as both cantonment magistrates and assistant-commissioners in non-regulation provinces can be appointed by the simple order of the Executive Government, their status differs in this respect from that of persons appointed to the Civil Service, which is created and defined by statutes.

"6. For the reasons, then, set out in the preceding paragraphs, Sir Alfred Lyall would recommend the entire omission of Section 1 from the Bill.

"7. Section 2 of the Bill proposes to make all sessions judges and district magistrates, in virtue of office, justices of the peace. With regard to this provision, I am now to explain in the reasons why, after careful deliberation, the Lieutenant Governor adheres to the opinion stated in the last paragraph of my letter, No. 692, dated 27th May, 1882, to the effect that the powers of justice of the peace might be conferred upon every native officer, whether a member of the covenanted Civil Service or a commissioned civil officer in a non-regulation province, who may be appointed to be a magistrate of a district. In the first place, the appointment of a native officer, except on temporary occasions, to be a magistrate of a district, would, at least in these provinces, be a substantial recognition of his trustworthiness, capacity, and strength of character. For the district magistrate, who in these provinces is also the collector, is the chief executive officer holding large powers and acting under serious responsibilities within a very considerable tract of country. He commands all the executive, police, and revenue officers in the district; and he is the controller of, and to a certain extent the appellate authority over, the magisterial courts of the district. Being thus one of the main springs of the whole public administration, the district magistrate is a member of the most important grade in the whole executive service of the Government in these provinces. It was probably with advertence to this fact that one of the non-official European gentlemen consulted regarding the Bill answered, that if a native civilian was appointed magistrate and collector, it would make no appreciable difference to him whether or not that officer was a justice of the peace. Whenever, therefore, a native civilian shall have been promoted to a position of such trust and influence, it will be both reasonable and expedient to confer upon him the full attributes of his office. For, since he is responsible for keeping order within his territorial jurisdiction, and for maintaining the authority of the Government and the law, not only should he be able to deal with persons of every class and condition, but it would be inconsistent and unwise to limit his power that he should not be able to use it against a European, even in cases of sudden emergency in which he might have to exercise authority personally in preserving the peace by punishing offenders. These reasons for giving full jurisdiction to district magistrates are, at any rate, clear and of public concern. Moreover, district magistrates are necessarily so limited in number that the full extent to which, by including them among justices of the peace, the jurisdiction could be extended, would be plainly understood and clearly circumscribed, and would not fluctuate with changes of opinion as to the fitness of particular native officers or classes of officers. Further, the principle of a ming district magistrates with exceptional powers has been the mainstay of our executive system from a very early date. At a time when ordinary jurisdiction over European British subjects was jealously reserved to the Supreme Courts at the Presidency towns, the statute of 53, George III., cap. 155, empowered the district magistrate as such (whether or not a justice of the peace), to try charges against a European British subject of certain offences committed against natives of India, and to pass sentence upon him. In fact, it is believed that investment with the powers of a justice of the peace was not essential to the exercise of the powers conferred under the statute until, for the first time, a proviso to that effect was introduced without discussion into Act 25 of 1861. It is, perhaps, true that up to 1832, when the statute 3 and 4 William IV., cap. 85, was passed, no native could have held the office of district magistrate; but the point is now mentioned to support the argument that the investment of the district magistrate, as such, with authority of a special kind has, if not always, still from a very early period of our administration, been admitted as essential to local administration.

"8. The Lieutenant Governor, therefore, supports the proposal to amend the law so as to make all district magistrates, in virtue of office justices of the peace. In the correspondence with which this discussion began, it was proposed by the Bengal Government to give full jurisdiction, at least, to all native members of the covenanted Civil Service who shall have attained the position of district magistrate or sessions judge; and in a minute by a majority of the High Court of these provinces it is said that to this extent an amendment of the law is not opposed by the judges, although the minute objects altogether to clauses (b), (c), and (d) of Section 1. The Lieutenant Governor's opinion, as has already been explained, is, that the appointment to a district magistracy should be taken as the necessary verification of personal fitness to exercise the special jurisdiction; and from this point of view he would not draw a distinction between members of the covenanted Civil Service and members of the native Civil Service constituted under statute 33 Vic., cap. 3. It may be true, although it has yet to be proved, that the former are likely, by reason of their training in England, to be better fitted than the latter to exercise the powers of justice of the peace. But this would be one of the points to be taken into account in appointing native civilians to be district magistrates; since, whether they were members of the Civil Service or of the statutory native Civil Service, their personal fitness to exercise all the functions of the appointment would have to be considered. It may also be observed that the statute 33 Vic., cap. 10, pledges the Government to confer appointments ordinarily reserved for the covenanted Civil Service only upon natives of India of proved merit and ability, under rules that may, from time to time, be varied; so that in the case of persons employed under this statute the selection for higher office must always be based strictly upon fitness and efficiency.

"9. The foregoing arguments in favour of the proposal to invest district magistrates, in virtue of office, with jurisdiction as justices of the peace, do not, however, in the Lieutenant Governor's opinion, apply to the proposed investment of sessions judges, in virtue of office, with similar powers. Every offence is ordinarily triable only within the district where it occurred; and as the charge must go in the first instance, before some magistrate, there are executive reasons why the district magistrate should not be debarred from receiving, and, according to law, disposing of any charge of an offence cognisable within his jurisdiction. But a committal for trial before a sessions judge involves few, if any, considerations of urgency or executive expediency, while it is usually as easy to arrange for the trial being held before the judge of one district as before that of another. The object of interposing, in 1872, the jurisdiction of the Sessions Court between the magistrate and the High Court was to save the expense, delay, and general disadvantages of sending Europeans from remote districts for trial to the High Court. This is a consideration which is certainly rather losing than gaining force as communications improve, and, at any rate, there will always be a sufficient number of European judges in different districts of these provinces to prevent serious inconvenience of this kind. Moreover, under the existing law in regard to the trial and punishment of European British subjects by the Court of Session, the judge not only possesses jurisdiction stretching over a very wide range of offences, and has power to pass a sentence that may be very severe to a European, but he can also decide whether the accused shall or shall not be sent to be tried by the High Court with a jury. In these provinces trials before sessions judges could rarely (except in the few larger stations) be held with a jury, while if procedure by jury were, as a rule, introduced for the trial of Englishmen, native judges might be embarrassed. On the whole, therefore, the Lieutenant Governor does not think that the anomaly of making a distinction in this respect between European and native judges, furnishes a sufficient reason for changing the law, in order to give native judges the special jurisdiction over European British subjects.

"10. In the final sentence of my letter, No. 692, dated May 27, 1882, the specific recommendation of the Lieutenant Governor was made in the following words:—

"In short, although the Lieutenant Governor would not, for the present, advise that a native covenanted civilian should be invested (save in very special cases) with the powers of a justice of the peace until he has been appointed, temporarily or permanently, to be a magistrate of a district, he would confer the powers of a justice of the peace on every native officer, whether a member of the Covenanted Civil Service or a commissioned civil officer in a non-regulation province, who may be appointed to be a magistrate of a district."

"Sir Alfred Lyall would now amend this recommendation by striking out the clause enclosed in the parenthesis, 'save in very special cases,' and he does not now advise, as was suggested in an earlier part of the confidential letter of the 27th May, 1882, that a native civilian, temporarily appointed to be a district magistrate, should retain his power as a justice of the peace on reversion to a subordinate post. He would attach the exercise of jurisdiction as justice of the peace to the office of district magistrate as a necessary or intrinsic function of the office itself, not of the individual who might hold it; and he would make no other substantive alteration in the law. He would retain the power, now held by the Local Government, of appointing, when reasons for it are shown, any European British subject, official or non-official, to be a justice of the peace. For there can be little doubt that in certain localities and circumstances it may be advisable, if not necessary, in the interests of the natives of the country themselves, that the Government should have the power of conferring upon European British magistrates, official or non-official, powers to deal promptly with their own countrymen. If, however, the Government of India are of opinion, upon a more general survey of the bearings of the question throughout India, that sessions judges ought to have jurisdiction as justices of the peace, the Lieutenant Governor would advise that, upon the analogy of the proviso in Section 4 of the Bill, the Local Government should be vested with discretion to confer, for special reasons, the jurisdiction upon native sessions judges who shall have held office for a period stated. To this arrangement, indeed, for the North Western Provinces and Oudh there would be no objection whatever; but in these provinces the sessions judges are often officers whose standing in the service is not higher than that of the district magistrates, and it becomes sometimes necessary to appoint, for short intervals, a junior officer.

"11. In the correspondence submitted with this letter it is more than once observed that the question of altering the present law regarding jurisdiction over European British subjects is in no way urgent. With this observation, so far as it relates to these provinces, the Lieutenant Governor feels bound to say that he concurs. From one of the minutes recorded by the judges of the High Court, it appears that during the past ten years the average annual number of charges against European British subjects has been eighty-one. Of these cases, by far the greatest number have occurred in the more important districts in or near large stations where European magistrates and sessions judges are always to be found, and where, for general administrative reasons, the offices of magistrate and sessions judge are not at all likely to pass out of the hands of European British officers. There are at present few European British subjects residing in the out-lying districts, at a distance from the principal towns and lines of communication, nor is there any prospect of their number increasing in parts of the country beyond easy reach and supervision from the principal centres. On the other hand, the native civilians now in these provinces are very few. In Oudh there is one native Assistant Commissioner, not belonging to the Civil Service, and two native civilians appointed in 1880 and 1881 under the statute 33 Vic. In the North-Western Provinces there are two officers, appointed in 1880 and 1881, under that statute, and one civilian, who entered the service by competition in 1876. It may be assumed that, even if the Bill were to pass unaltered, the Government of India would expect that before the powers of a justice of the peace were conferred upon any officer of the classes made eligible, his general capacity and judgment as a magistrate of the first class would be tested by some years' probation in that class. It follows that, under any circumstances, not more than one or two of the gentlemen just referred to would soon be eligible as justices of the peace. And even if the proportion of native civilians annually attached to this administration be in future augmented, the number of those who could be appointed justices of the peace must nevertheless, for a long period to come, be exceedingly small.

"12. On the other hand, the English community in the North-Western provinces has shown since the Bill was published a natural desire that criminal charges against them should, as heretofore, be inquired into and tried by English judicial officers. To this arrangement no demur, so far as the Lieutenant Governor can ascertain, is made by the natives of these provinces at large. It is true that some leading native gentlemen, whose views and feelings carry much weight and merit much consideration, distinctly support the principle of removing class differences and race disqualifications, and would wish to see native officers removed from any such disability. But Sir Alfred Lyall nevertheless believes that all native gentlemen possessing judgment, ripe experience, and real knowledge of these provinces would advise great care in selecting native officers for the exercise of what must inevitably be in many cases a difficult and peculiar jurisdiction.

"13. In these circumstances the question of extending to native magistrates the power of justice of the peace cannot be said to press upon this Administration. But whenever the Government of India determine that it must be settled (and now that the question has been formally taken up it must be settled), the Lieutenant Governor would certainly give the jurisdiction to all district magistrates, and he believes that this amendment of the present law would fulfil all reasonable expectations, and answer all practical purposes. I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

"J. R. REID,
"Officiating Secretary to Government North West Provinces and Oudh."

MR. BERDMORE'S ESSAYS.*

A WORK of this kind does not often get much notice from reviewers. They have before them an ungracious task—they cannot dispute that the essays of which it is composed have passed by the Caudine Forks of two, if not of more editors. In this case we believe it is two, for the learned gentleman who holds the reins of the dear old Quarterly was present there throughout 1877 when Mr. Berdmore's articles appeared, and we fancy that the vigorous and intellectual doctor, with whose political opinions we so decidedly differ, was working away at the Westminster in 1864-7.

But were it half-a-dozen of editors who had accepted these essays as written in the purest Saxon, and conveying fair notions on their respective subjects, still here they are on their own merits for criticism. An article has to be a very powerful one to be worth re-printing, and the public will probably very soon tell the publishers whether in this case they have made a mistake. This means that we are not by signs of approval or the reverse about to attempt to guide a public perfectly well able to select its own literary fodder—what we rather want to note here is the singular brain or temperament that has treated at such different periods subjects so utterly diverse.

In 1864, evidently much affected by the death of an author for whom he appears to have had an extraordinary reverence, he places on record a monograph in which, whether correct or not, he pours out his whole soul. He analyses the analyst; dealing with our English Balzac he puts a touch of Balzac into his criticism:—

"We remember that at the commencement of the 'Snob Papers' he was careful to tell us that he was the historian of snobs because he was one himself, and more than once in a confidential 'aside' to the public, he hinted that he was as bad as the man he sketched. He even said that he should like to walk down Pall Mall with two Dukes on his arms. This might be gentle laughing, but we incline to think there was a certain sincerity beneath it all, self-consciousness of the truthful man who had studied his own mental defects, and had no intention to claim—on the contrary, rather strove to disclaim—a self-immunity from the weaknesses that influenced others. 'Know thyself,' said the old Greek, 'and perhaps those only best discover the cause of the pimples in human nature who have first marked their appearance on their own skin, and remembered the rich condiments of pride, selfishness, and luxury which have induced them."

A most singular analysis we take this to be, but it is not an ill-natured one, for a few lines farther on the examiner of Thackeray's character breaks out with an indignant protest:—

"If any think that we do him an injustice in recalling weaknesses which might be buried, we can only say that that man is, in our eyes, greater who digs in his own heart for less beautiful traits of human nature, and is not afraid to expose the weaknesses he himself has felt, than the writer who gives us airy romances and fictitious sentiment, slurring over the desolate hovels of habit and custom in which we live together with himself."

There were, no doubt, certain discrepancies in the subjective character of Thackeray which the writer has noted with some felicity, and, so far as we are aware, no one before or after him has pointed out that Thackeray personally was at one time Warrington, at another Arthur Pendennis. These different types existed not merely in the brain but in the man himself.

We do not, in reviewing a review, wish to be harsh, but why did not Mr. Berdmore stick to the text of the Westminster Review of 1864? We have compared it with the reprint, and find some very considerable mitigation of expressions which it then used.

Is it that he too repents youthful excess of language, and is more just as he becomes more conservative in his views? For, that Mr. Berdmore had what were then advanced views, is clear by the nature of the organ in which he gave them expression. His article on Russia is a most glaring case of an author reprinting matter and then calling out "Peccavi," p. 160. We do not blame him. We think it rather honest; but it is the most extreme point to which cynicism can go, and that is a quality on which, so we have heard, Mr. Berdmore rather prides himself.

We are not captious critics. It is very honourable for anyone to say "I have been wrong," and if we doubt about the condition of the author's head in 1864-7, we cannot dispute that he has a brave heart in 1883, for it is only a brave heart that says "I have sinned."

If this is a scratch team, it is a very quaint and singular one. Somehow or other there seems to be a skewbald in it. It wants harmony, and yet it has "go" in it. From Thackeray to Russia, from the stomach and the palate to a criticism on the coaches that start from the White Horse Cellars, all are the same to Mr. Berdmore. He fears not to speak his mind on anything he touches, and this is the merit of the work. Queer he may be in his admission of past errors, but with strong convictions he always writes. He pursues an idea to the last point—vide his curious comment on a coachman's driving-seat, p. 245.

Before we conclude, we will hark back to the article on Russia, because it is likely to cause renewed attention in view of the additional somewhat stringent remarks on Count Schouvaloff, Lord Derby, and others. In the preface Mr. Berdmore says:—

"I have made some additions, and but few corrections; but I am bound to say that inasmuch as the article on Russia touches on politics, there has been a great deal in the conduct of her Government, to say nothing of Nihilistic crimes, which prove to me that I took too optimistic a view of the nation, and that the 'earth hunger' of which other publicists have written was too much veiled from my eyes by the glamour of a hospitality which I shall always readily acknowledge."

"Some observations due to the Franco-German War of 1870 are placed here instead of under 'Russia.' When she repudiated the Black Sea clause of the treaty that followed the Crimean War, Gambetta threw away one of those great chances which might have proved that he was indeed a statesman. The journey of Thiers to the north must have proved to him that France was to have no help from that quarter. To have sent her fleet round to the Black Sea would have proved that, even with Germany on her hands, France had still regard for treaties, and intended to have them respected. Whether with the weak men at our helm then, as now, France would have forced our hand for very shame, I cannot say, but certainly she would have made us blush to accept so calmly the undone work for which, in common with her, we spent our blood; and even to blush is not so bad for a nation, when it permits its rulers to do ignoble, or fail to do noble acts. By-and-bye the working man will have his say as well as the bourgeois, and I think he will not allow his Government to turn the other cheek to the enemy,—perhaps, also, with a good deal more pride for his country than the Birmingham Radical, he will think that places like New Guinea had better be annexed."

We certainly do not disagree with these observations, but why were they not incorporated with the article? The author is, or should be, an artist in composition; then why relegate to a preface what should have formed part of his work? According to our view, a graver error could not have been committed.

Whatever may be the fortune of the work, no one will dispute that the style is peculiarly crisp and terse. Take, for instance, his history of the mail and other coaches from 1800 to 1850, pp. 226-240, every page of which smells of the road.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1883.

LORD RIPON'S REVOLUTIONARY LAND POLICY IN BENGAL.

AN APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE AND PRESS OF GREAT BRITAIN.

We publish to-day in extenso the Petitions to Parliament, (1) of the Central Committee of Landholders of Bengal and Behar meeting in Calcutta, and (2) of the Zemindars and other Landholders of the Province of Behar. These Petitions represent the views of the whole of the landed interest throughout the vast territories that are to be smitten by the blight of Lord Ripon's revolutionary land policy; and even a casual glance at their wording will be sufficient to show both the serious character, and the entire reasonableness, of the panic that has been caused in the hitherto peaceful and prosperous Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal, by the prospect of the sweeping changes to be introduced by the Bengal Tenancy Bill. The Calcutta Petition only reached England during the last days of the dying Session; and though it was promptly laid before the two Houses of Parliament by Lord Lytton and Mr. Stanhope respectively, there was, of course, no possibility of its merits being examined or discussed. The Behar Petition has not even now been presented. And yet it is seriously stated that the Government of India—under cover of the dust that has been raised by other measures which have engrossed the attention of its European critics, and backed up by the despotic power of a reckless and fanatical Viceroy—will force this most disastrous Bill into law before either the British public or the British Parliament has had any opportunity of inquiring into its dangerous and anarchical tendencies.

We appeal, therefore, on behalf of the unrepresented and defenceless people of Bengal, to our public-spirited contemporaries in the Press of England, to examine these alarming petitions for themselves, and to place before the generous British public the conclusions which must assuredly suggest themselves on the perusal. In this way alone can the public conscience of Great Britain be awakened in time, and a great national crime (as well as a gigantic political blunder) be prevented.

To those who know anything of the history of British rule in India we need hardly say that the landowners of Bengal and Behar form a large and most important community, with a few rich and thousands of very poor men, unsurpassed in loyalty and devotion to the just and benevolent Government that has hitherto protected them, and every other community in the land, with scrupulous impartiality. And further, we need hardly point out that, in a country so exclusively agricultural as Bengal and Behar, a sudden and violent revolution in the relations between landlord and tenant means a social and political cataclysm. We have already shown in these columns what will be the disastrous results of Lord Ripon's policy in regard to the actual cultivators of the soil; who will infallibly be reduced, under its operation, to the position of mere serfs ground down under the oppression of money-lenders, the most merciless of middlemen. That conclusion of ours will be found to be amply borne out by clauses 48 and 49 of the Behar petition, and by clause 9, section iii., of the Calcutta petition. But here, in these petitions, we find the whole body of the landowners of Bengal and Behar coming forward, solemnly to declare that the Bill will "revolutionise the present relations between landlord and tenant in the provinces of Bengal and Behar"—will "redistribute landed property on a new and inequitable basis"—will "fetter the freedom of action of all classes interested in agriculture by driving them at almost every step of their mutual transactions to Courts of Law and fiscal officers"—will "foster disputes, litigation, and animosity in lieu of peace, harmony, and goodwill"—and is "a policy which, while confiscating the property of your petitioners, will prove most detrimental to the true interests and prosperity of the country."

And it will be seen that these most alarming statements are by no means mere unsupported assertions; they are, in each of the petitions, proved to demonstration, by a thorough and rigorous examination of the provisions of the Bill. It will be seen that all and more than all the most rasping conditions of recent Irish legislation—fixity of tenure, fair rent, free sale, compensation for disturbance, abolition of power of contract, and in fact the solid programme of the most "advanced" school—are to be introduced at a rush into Bengal, a country that differs as widely from Ireland in every political and economical aspect, as it is possible for any two countries to differ; whilst, astonishing to relate, all these enormously valuable rights—filched from the Zemindars in defiance of the most solemn pledges of the British Government in the Permanent Settlement, and reducing them (see Behar petition, clause 7) to the position of "mere cyphers upon their estates"—are to be conferred upon, not the actual cultivators; but what will practically be a newly-created class of middlemen, against whom the actual cultivators will possess no rights whatever, not even those rights which they now possess against the zemindars! For such an astounding triumph of what the Behar Zemindars justly call (clause 67) "visionary theories" over common-sense, equity, and good faith, it would be difficult to find a parallel in either British or Indian history. And, as if to accentuate the monstrous injustice of these proposals, it is to be deliberately enacted that they are not to affect "any enactment regulating the procedure for the realisation of rents in estates belonging to the Government!"—the e are the very words of the Bill, chapter I., section 4 (c)!

Under the Bill, absolutely the whole of the effective control over the land—and consequently, of course, all the influence and prestige in the country that are attached to that control—will pass from the ancient lords of the soil to the new class of middlemen, consisting chiefly of money-lenders. Looking to the political effect of such a substitution, we entirely agree with the Behar Zemindars, when they declare—

"Your petitioners would further respectfully say that they have done nothing to deserve such treatment at the hands of the British Government. They have always been conspicuously loyal to the British Crown, during the times of difficulty at the beginning of the century; and during the more troublous days of 1857, the zemindars of Bengal and Behar placed themselves, their influence, and their wealth, ungrudgingly at the disposal of the Government. But if this wealth, and this influence is destroyed, to what class of the community will the Government in future look for support? If the zemindars, whose welfare has always been bound up with the British Government, are sacrificed to visionary theories, what class of the community will be able in future to repose with confidence, on—what had up to the present time been inviolable, the honour, and good faith of the British Government?"

We earnestly implore Lord Ripon and his advisers solemnly to ponder these striking words, so eloquent in their simple truthfulness. And we call on all those to whom the honour and the welfare of Her Majesty's Indian Empire are dear, to unite in praying the Government to stay the destroying hand of mis-called reform, and to give up a measure that is so clearly fraught with calamity and peril to all classes affected by it, as well as to the country at large.

DR. RAJENDRALALA MITRA'S LATEST WORK.

STUDENTS of philosophy in all parts of the world will receive with great pleasure the latest work of our great Indian Sanskritist, which has recently been published by the Asiatic Society of Bengal. Therein Dr. Mitra has given to science not only an English translation (followed by the Sanskrit text) of the Yoga Aphorisms of Patanjali, with the Commentary of Bhoja Raja, but also an elaborate preface, in which he exhaustively discusses the relations of the Yoga system with all the cognate European and Indian systems, both ancient and modern; and elucidates, to an extent hitherto unattempted, the many difficulties and obscurities of this little-understood philosophy. A writer, with whom we are unable to agree, has described Pessimism as the "goal of modern thought" in Europe. However that may be, Dr. Mitra shows clearly enough that that goal was very definitely reached in India "over four and twenty centuries ago." This he demonstrates by a comparison, as learned as it is acute and closely-reasoned, of the early history and teaching of the Yoga with those of the Sankhya, and both with the earliest and purest philosophy of Buddhism. This disquisition will unquestionably take rank as one of the most important and valuable contributions to the investigation of at most curious and interesting problem, and must henceforward be one of the leading authorities upon it.

Not less valuable, and perhaps even more generally interesting, is Dr. Mitra's elaboration of the connection between these ancient Pessimist systems of the early Hindus, and the modern doctrine evolved by Schopenhauer, and developed by Hartmann. He goes on to trace a still more direct and intimate relation between them and the theories of modern spiritualism, with its "occult" appendage—of which he shows that the Yoga system is the archetype.

Dr. Mitra proves from the Lalita-vistara that the doctrines of the Sankhya and Yoga-systems were widely current before the time of Buddha. But he adds:—

"We have enough in these facts and reasons to infer that the Yoga textbook is posterior to the Sankhya textbook, and that both the textbooks are later than Buddha; but that the doctrines of the two schools are very old. Anyhow, these are the immediate ancient Hindu archetypes of the Nihilist theory of Buddha, and indirectly of the Pessimism of Schopenhauer and Hartmann."

In reading Dr. Rajendralala Mitra's terse and lucid explanations of the many extremely abstruse points with which he deals, it is almost impossible to realise that the writer is writing in a language other than that in which he was born. Dr. Mitra's particularly clear and forcible style would do credit to any English savant; and the invaluable services he is rendering, year after year, to linguistic, philosophical, and archæological science, are admirable illustrations of the happy results that may be attained by the application of Western methods to Oriental erudition. We are sure that every Orientalist in Europe will agree with us in thinking those services are already such as to merit the highest recognition that can be accorded to them, whether by the State, or by the learned bodies of this and other countries; and we can only hope that the accomplished author may long live to adorn and enrich the literatures alike of India and of England.

HOME NEWS.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—Tenders for Rs.25,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on Wednesday at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—in bills on Calcutta, Rs.5,87,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7½d.; and on Bombay, Rs.3,22,500, at an average rate of 1s. 7½d. In telegraphic transfers on Calcutta, Rs.11,00,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7½d.; and on Bombay, Rs.6,00,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7½d., or a total remittance of Rs.26,09,500. Tenders for bills on both Presidencies at 1s. 7½d. and above, received in full, and for telegraphic transfers on both presidencies at 1s. 7½d. and above in full. Between April 1 and Sept. 25 the total amount of bill and transfers sold reached Rs.9,13,87,650, and realised £7,402,005.

THE ILBERT BILL.—Mr. F. T. Atkins, of Allahabad, who is on his way to England as a delegate from India, to draw attention to the results which would follow the passing of this Bill into law and to interest English opinion in the matter, was expected to arrive in London to-day (Monday). Letters should be addressed to him to the care of Messrs. D. J. Keymer and Co., East India general and shipping agents, 1, Whitefriars-street, E.C.

ACCIDENT TO MR. J. K. CROSS, M.P.—Mr. J. K. Cross, M.P., Under Secretary for India, who, for the last month, has been the guest of his brother-in-law, Mr. Mellor, Knockando House, Speyside, North Britain, was, it is said, inspecting a young horse offered for sale on Saturday, when the animal suddenly kicked him above the knee and threw him to the ground. Fortunately no bones were broken, and it is hoped that after a few days' rest he will recover.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA.—The directors have resolved to pay an interim dividend for the half-year ended June 30 last at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, carrying forward £2,544.

CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA, AND CHINA.—At an extraordinary general meeting on the 17th inst., the directors will recommend an interim dividend, for the half year ended June 30 last, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, free of income tax.

INDIAN REFORM ASSOCIATION.—The British Indian Committee, which was formed in consequence of the agitation raised by Anglo-Indians who are opposed to the policy of the Marquis of Ripon's Government, and especially to the Criminal Jurisdiction Bill, have issued a circular announcing that it is proposed to establish the committee as a permanent society under the name of the "Indian Reform Association." The purpose of the society will be "to co-operate with the people of India in promoting their political progress and material interests, and to inform the British public regarding the condition of India," and the circular remarks:—"In every division of our Indian Empire there is a growing number of intelligent, educated men, who have studied the history of English political progress, and have been encouraged to hope for an increasing share in the administration of their own country, and it would be contrary to all experience to expect men under such circumstances to permanently remain in a position of social and political inferiority. The growth of public opinion in India, its free press, the development of public instruction from the elementary school to the university, the railways, telegraphs, municipal institutions, and the general progress of enlightenment, have brought about a new political condition in that land demanding wisdom and judgment on the part of those responsible for its administration." "With these considerations in view," the circular further states, "we believe that an enlightened and organised English public opinion should be created as a national tribunal for considering the great questions which will inevitably come before it in the future—a court to which the people of India may come with confidence," and in its concluding paragraph declares that "the chief object of the Indian Reform Association will be to qualify the British public to discharge this great function."

THE VISIT OF THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT TO INDIA.—The Duke and Duchess of Connaught, who shortly return from Germany to England, are expected to stay a few days at Bagshot, before bidding farewell to their relatives and friends in this country, and leaving for India, whither the Duke proceeds in order to take up his command. Their Royal Highnesses, attended by Lord and Lady Downe, Sir Maurice Fitzgerald, and Dr. Scott, on quitting London, travel overland by the usual mail route to Brindisi, and thence by the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's vessel Cathay, Captain W. M. Robbie, 2,983 tons, and 2,500 effective horsepower, to the East. The berths secured from fourteen to twenty-one inclusive—situated nearly amidship on the starboard side of the saloon, have been reserved for the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and immediately adjoining their cabins, others closer to the after hatch have been allotted to the members of the Royal suite. The Cathay, which starts from Venice on Friday, the 2nd of November, proceeds via Ancona to Brindisi, which she reaches on the 4th of the same month, for the purpose of receiving her Royal and other passengers, and the mails, which will be despatched from London two days previously. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught and their suite, on arriving at Brindisi, will embark on board the Cathay, and, leaving the Italian coast on Monday, the 5th of November, will pass out of the Adriatic, and cross the Mediterranean Sea to Port Said. Thence their Royal Highnesses steam through the Canal to Suez, which they quit at midnight on the following Thursday, and proceed via Aden to Bombay, where they arrive at noon on Tuesday, the 20th of November, at the close of a journey of about fifteen days from Brindisi.

THE SILVER MARKET AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.—The further advance in the Bank of Bengal discount rate to 8 per cent. imparted a firmer tone on Thursday, to the value of bar silver, a small amount having been sold for India at 50 15-16d. per ounce. Mexican dollars were nominally quoted at the old price, the arrival ex Para not being ready for sale. Indian telegraphic transfer rates were firm at 1s. 7½d. in Calcutta, and 1s. 7 19-32d. in Bombay, China rates for four months' bills being again higher at 5s. 1½d. in Shanghai, and 3s. 8¾d. in Hongkong. Under the combined influences of a fresh rise in bar silver, firm Indian exchanges, and cheap money, Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rupee Paper was in better demand, and rose another ¼, to 84½ to 84¾. The Four per Cent. remained at 80½ to 81. On Friday the directors of the Bank of Bombay raised their discount rate from 6 per cent. to 7 per cent. The Silver Market was consequently firm, owing to the continued demand for remittances. A further small amount of bars changed hands at 50 15-16d. per ounce, while that portion of the Mexican dollars per Para from the West Indies which had not been sold to arrive was settled at 49 11-16d., showing an advance of 1-16d. on the price previously paid. A fairly good business was done in Rupee Paper; but prices were unaltered, and so were all Eastern exchange rates, although the tendency was firm.—On Saturday the market continued firm, but inactive. Prices were unaltered at 50 15-16d. per oz. for bars, and 49 11-16d. for Mexican dollars. The exchanges from the East were as follows:—Bombay (telegraphic transfers), 1s. 7 19-32d. per rupee; Calcutta (telegraphic transfers), 1s. 7 19-32d.; Hongkong, 3s. 8 5-8d. per dollar; and Shanghai, 3s. 1½d. per taol.

PRODUCE MARKETS.—Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson state that the markets are still too largely supplied to allow of any improvement in prices, and buyers generally acting with caution, the tone is quiet. The further reduction of the Bank rate to 3 per cent. announced to-day being expected, had slight influence upon business. Raw sugar has been exceedingly dull, but sellers of beet obtain rather firmer rates, as the outturn this season may not prove equal to outside estimates, and the present quotations are very low. In the coffee market a quiet feeling prevails. Plantation Ceylon and East India are depressed, and about 2s. per cwt. cheaper. The few parcels of Guatemala at auction have realised some advance, the deliveries showing a gradual increase in the consumption. Rio is firm, with less demand. The telegrams from New York and Havre advise irregular or weaker quotations. Rice shows a recovery of about 6d. per cwt. on the rates last quoted for Burmah cargoes. Colonial cocoa is rather better. The importers of tea continue to realise at auction daily, and the supplies being rather heavy, prices are in some cases again in favour of the buyers. Of Indian the quantity in the catalogues has been unusually large, but met a steady demand at firm prices, with the exception of finest kinds. At the spice sales on Wednesday nothing of interest transpired. The feature of the week has been some speculation in Zanzibar cloves at fully ¼d. per lb. recovery. Cochin ginger is unsettled, and medium qualities lower. East Indian cinchona bark has further receded in price.

RAJAH RAMMOHUN RAJ.—Professor Max Müller on Thursday night delivered an address at the Bristol Museum on Rajah Rammohun Raj, the Indian Reformer. He began his address with a statement of the facts which connected Rammohun Raj with the city of Bristol. He arrived in England early in 1831, and in the beginning of September, 1833, came to Bristol, where he died. In 1843 his remains were removed to the cemetery of Arncliffe, where a monument to his memory was erected by his friend and follower, Dvarkanath Tajore. The inscription on that monument commented on the labours of the Rajah on behalf of a pure monotheism, his efforts to abolish Suttee and other cruel superstitions, and to improve the moral and physical welfare of the people of India. Professor Max Müller then gave a sketch of the Rajah's life, chiefly taken from autobiographical notices and letters. At sixteen years of age Rajah Rammohun was banished from his father's house on account of his heterodox opinions. After spending six years travelling through many parts of India, and even beyond its frontier to Thibet, he returned to his father's house about 1796. After some years, however, his continued opposition to every form of idolatry and his determined advocacy of several social reforms, such as the abolition of the burying of widows, produced a new breach between him and his family. His father died in 1804, and Rammohun Raj became still more outspoken in his heretical opinions. He entered the service of the East India Company, and acted for a number of years as Dirwan to a Mr. Digby. When he had gained an independent fortune he retired from the service and settled at Calcutta. This was in 1814, and from that time his house became the centre of the social and religious reformers of the time. The number of his followers grew from year to year, and in 1830 he formed a Prayer Hall in Calcutta, where the members of the Braham Samaj have ever since performed their religious services. Professor Max Müller then proceeded to examine some of the statements of the older biographers of the Rajah, and showed that several of them were untrustworthy, expressing a hope that they would soon have a more critical biography from the pen of Miss Collett.

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

(From the Bombay Gazette, Sept. 11.)

Major General Sir Herbert Macpherson left Allahabad on Sept. 4, on leave, for Chakrata. During his absence, Colonel Burn, commanding at Cawnpore, assumes command of the Allahabad Division.

It is stated that the Secretary of State has confirmed Colonel R. C. Stewart in the appointment of Quartermaster General of the Madras Army, with the local rank of brigadier general. As the appointment of agent for remounts will thus become vacant, Lieutenant Colonel Ewing, who has been officiating in the appointment, will, in all probability, be confirmed in it.

There will be a considerable influx of military men into Bangalore in connection with the forthcoming camp of exercise. The following officers are already booked to put in an appearance:—His Excellency the Commander in Chief in India, Sir Donald Stewart, accompanied by Captain Owen, Captain Haines, and Lieut. Stewart, A.D.C.'s, as also by a Native A.D.C.; Major General Greaves, Adjutant General in India; Major General Sir Charles Macgregor, Quartermaster General in India; Colonel Collet, Deputy Adjutant General; Colonel Sanford, Deputy Quartermaster General; Colonel T. Hughes, R.A., Deputy Adjutant General; Colonel H. Moore, Persian Interpreter; Surgeon Major Davis; two A.D.C.'s, and Resaldar Major Hasan Ali Khan, Sardar Bahadur, Native A.D.C.; Brigadier General John Gordon; Sir Hugh Gough; Colonel Hughes, 2nd Dorsetshire Regiment; Colonel Marter, 1st Dragoon Guards (who captured Ceteywayo after the battle of Ulundi); Colonel Hudson, 28th Punjab Native Infantry; Lieutenant Colonel Briscoe, Assistant Adjutant General; Major Pearson, Deputy Assistant Quartermaster General; and Major Covey, Durham Light Infantry.

Colonel Hudson, commanding the 28th Punjab Infantry, is one of the eight officers chosen to accompany the Commander in Chief (Sir D. Stewart) to the Bangalore camp of exercise.

Colonel W. H. A. Buttler, commandant 23rd Madras Light Infantry, at present on furlough to Europe on medical certificate, from Feb. 16, 1883, has been admitted to the colonel's allowance.

Lieutenant Colonel Brook, South Lancashire Regiment, has obtained an extension of leave in England to the 9th inst.

Major H. H. P. Cowper, Bengal Cavalry List, has been granted three months' extension of leave to Dec. 8 next.

Major H. Gunter, Royal Highlanders, has been allowed a further period of two years in his appointment as garrison instructor.

Major H. Paterson, 23rd Pioneers, Mean Meer, leaves that station for Kurrachee on Sept. 10, en route to England, on the furlough granted him by G.G.O.F. 33 of 1883.

Major Hornby, 12th Lancers, has been granted fifteen months' leave to England.

From cornet to lieutenant colonel in fifteen years and seventeen days, is rapid promotion, and Lieutenant Colonel Percy Barrow, of the 19th Hussars, may be considered a lucky man, the Pioneer remarks, in that he will be a full colonel at thirty-nine, and able to retire on his £420 a year at forty-one, or earlier should Colonel Webster not care to complete his four years in command. Lieutenant Colonel Barrow entered the 19th Hussars in 1868, long after it had ceased to be the 1st Bengal European Cavalry; he received the C.M.G. for his services in Africa, and since August, 1874, till 25th July, 1883, with the exception of seven months, he has been on the staff.

The E Company Madras (Queen's Own) Sappers and Miners, is under orders from Bangalore to Aden.

The 14th Regiment Madras Native Infantry, stationed at Dorunda, Bengal, has been ordered to the camp of exercise at Bangalore. Its place at Dorunda will be taken by a wing of the regiment at Alipore. The ultimate destination of the 14th Regiment will be decided hereafter.

The G-1 Royal Artillery will proceed from Benares to Cawnpore, instead of to Mean Meer, and the N-3 Royal Artillery from Cawnpore to Mean Meer, instead of remaining at Cawnpore.

Lieutenants Maxwell, 2nd Cheshire, and Rich, 1st East Lancashire Regiment, have been appointed to the 10th and 12th Madras Native Infantry respectively, as probationers for the Staff Corps.

FROM THE

QUARTERLY AND WESTMINSTER REVIEWS

ON

 THACKERAY.

RUSSIA.

CARRIAGES, ROADS, AND COACHES.

BY

SEPT. BERDMORE (NIMSHIVICH).

With Notes and Additions.

From The Academy, April 28, 1877.

But the article of the number is one on 'The Kitchen and the Cellar,' a survey of British and Foreign cookery, after a lapse of forty years since last the oracle of the Quarterly spoke on the subject. . . . The article discusses what elements of cooking for private households in France we can import with advantage into this country, and finds the secret in a better understood herbal flavour in soups, the more perfect grilling of the French charcoal fuel, and the cleanliness with which fish, flesh, and fowl are thus grilled, and served with perfectly and separately made sauces. In connection with the cellar, the writer considers the universal introduction of red wines for dinner as important for the palate as the amelioration of soups."

From "Our Van," Baily's Magazine, November, 1877.

"The current number of the Quarterly Review contains a paper which will most certainly be read with much interest at the present time. . . . The paper in question, entitled 'Carriages, Roads, and Coaches,' treats (and in a most exhaustive manner, too) of all sorts of conveyances, used for business as well as for pleasure, their various shapes and builds, and of the materials of which they are composed. . . . The roads on which we ride and drive are also most elaborately discussed; and the merits and demerits of wood, granite, asphalt, and macadam most artistically defined. . . . Tramways, the greatest nuisances (barring, probably, bicycles) to driving and riding, are also fully expatiated upon; harness and other appointments are treated of in their proper places; and the whole concludes with a lengthened dissertation upon coaching, past and present; driving, professional and amateur; the times kept; the financial status of the coaches that are now on the road; a few good hints to both coachmen and guards; all of which will be found instructive as well as amusing."

GUJARAT AND THE GUJARATIS:

 TAKEN FROM LIFE BY
 BEHRAMJI M. MALABARI,
 Author of the "Indian Muse in English Garb," "Pleasures of Morality," "Wilson-Virah," &c. Editor of the "Indian Spectator," Bombay.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A quaint and undoubtedly clever book from the pen of a native of India. The volume consists of a series of short sketches of scenes and people in Gujarat which may be regarded as typical of classes of the community, their ways of life and modes of thought. Mr. Malabari's English style is remarkably good, and seldom exhibits any want of ease. His book is of special interest as throwing some light on the real feeling of the natives with regard to their British rulers."—Daily Telegraph.

"The book is clever throughout."—Academy.

SECRETARY—Mr. George Draper.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The Directors of the Eastern Telegraph Company, Limited, are prepared to receive subscriptions for the unallotted Balance of the above Stock, which is issued under the authority of Special Resolutions, whereby the Company's Mortgage Debenture Stock is constituted a first charge on the undertaking and revenue of the Company, and the total amount issuable is never to exceed one-third of the paid-up share capital of the Company for the time being.

The share capital consists of £3,800,000 Ordinary and £700,000 Preference Shares, both classes being at a premium.

The present issue is made for redemption of Terminable Debentures falling due in October next, and for payment for the Trieste-Corfu Telegraph Cable, and other important expenditures on capital account.

The Company was formed in 1872 by amalgamation of four then existing separate companies. It now owns about 18,250 miles of submarine telegraph cable, consisting of duplicate, and in some cases triplicate, lines, between England, Spain, Portugal, Gibraltar, Malta, Egypt, Aden, and Bombay, with a series of cables between Italy and Greece and the islands of the Levant, and extending to Cyprus, Syria, and Constantinople, from whence a cable of the Black Sea Telegraph Company, worked by the Company, runs to Odessa.

The Company's cables are, with few exceptions, laid in depths of water which permit repairs being made with facility and economy by its own ships.

The net revenue of the Company, after paying all working and other expenses, income tax, &c., for the three years ending March 31, 1883, was as follows:—

|      |     |     |     |     |          |
|------|-----|-----|-----|-----|----------|
| 1881 | ... | ... | ... | ... | £367,523 |
| 1882 | ... | ... | ... | ... | £368,882 |
| 1883 | ... | ... | ... | ... | £400,777 |

and the dividends and bonus paid on the ordinary shares have been in the corresponding periods at the rate of 5½ per cent., 5½ per cent., and 6 per cent.

The reserve funds at March 31, 1883, of the Company (accumulated from revenue) stood at £569,828, of which £328,574 was at that date invested in securities.

Subscriptions in any of the existing debentures of the Company will be accepted, at par, in lieu of cash, and credit given for the interest thereon up to the first half-yearly date for payment of interest on the Debenture Stock.

Prospectuses and forms of application may be obtained at the offices, 66, Old Broad-street, London.

THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutions throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 200 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE PETITIONS OF ZEMINDARS AND OTHER LANDHOLDERS IN THE PROVINCE OF BEHAR, AND OF THE LANDHOLDERS OF BENGAL AND BEHAR AGAINST THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1883.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

PETITION OF ZEMINDARS AND OTHER LANDHOLDERS IN THE PROVINCE OF BEHAR.

To the Honourable the Commons of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled. The humble Petition of the undersigned, zemindars and other landholders in the Province of Behar,

HUMBLY SHEWETH—

1. That your Petitioners are zemindars and other landowners in the Province of Behar.
2. That the lands of which your Petitioners are now in possession have, in many instances, descended to them through a long line of ancestors, under titles which have never been questioned, either by the Mahomedan rulers of the country in days gone by, or by the British Government since the introduction of British rule.
3. That in all the numerous Regulations and Laws which have been enacted by the British Government during the past century, for the amelioration of the condition of the people, the full proprietary rights of your Petitioners in their lands have ever been acknowledged, and it is upon this basis that the legislation of the past 100 years has proceeded.
4. That your Petitioners could refer to numerous official reports to prove that they had not been insensible to their duties as landlords, but it will, perhaps, be sufficient to quote the testimony of Sir Ashley Eden, the late Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, who, in the year 1881, made the following observations with regard to the peasantry of Behar, in reply to an address of the Behar Landholders Association :—
“I can assure you that nothing has given me greater pleasure than to notice, as I have had ample opportunities of doing, the extraordinary improvement in the condition of the people. It is made manifest in a hundred ways daily, even to the most casual observer. I hear the same story from all classes, official and non-official, and it is a matter for general congratulation. The improvement is due to various causes, first and foremost to several succeeding harvests, plentiful almost beyond the recollection of the present generation, and these full harvests followed years of trial and famine; next, there has been, with growing prosperity, an increase in the value of land, a general awakening of the cultivating classes, and an improved knowledge of their legal rights and privileges; and this has, I hope, been accompanied by a strict administration of the law; then there has been a greater readiness on the part of landlords to recognise and affirm the rights of cultivators, and I hope, that this may, to some extent, be due to the influence of your association.”
5. That in spite of this testimony of the growing prosperity of the peasantry of Behar and the general character of your petitioners as a body, a Bill has been introduced into the Legislative Council of His Excellency the Governor General and Viceroy of India, which, if permitted to pass into law, will not only deprive your petitioners of their property, but will revolutionise the province of Behar.
6. That the avowed object of the Bill is to confer a transferable and hereditary tenant-right upon the ryots of Behar; and to make this newly-created tenant-right still more valuable, the zemindars are to be prohibited from entering into any contract or agreement with their tenants, as to the terms upon which the land is to be held, or the rate of rent which the tenants are to pay.

7. That the effect of the Bill is simply to deprive the zemindars of their proprietary rights, and to render them mere cyphers upon their estates.

8. That these violent innovations have been spontaneously proposed by the Government, neither the zemindars nor the ryots of Behar having ever invoked the interference of the Legislature.

9. That your petitioners emphatically deny that the circumstances and condition of the peasantry of Behar are such, as to warrant any exceptional and one-sided legislation; and they claim, as a matter of right, that before they are deprived of their property, a proper inquiry into the circumstances of the province may be made, and that before being condemned, they may be heard in their defence.

10. That your Petitioners do not deny that there may be bad landlords in Behar as well as in other countries; but they maintain that the existing laws, if properly administered, are amply sufficient to give protection to the meanest ryot, without resorting to enactments which are subversive of the rights of property, and shake the confidence of the people in the justice of the Government.

11. That in justification of these violent measures it is alleged :—

1st.—That though the zemindars have exercised proprietary rights over their estates for the past ninety years, they have never been recognised by the Government as proprietors in the proper acceptation of the term, and that the object of the present Bill is merely to relegate them to the position which they occupied at the time of the Permanent Settlement in 1793.

2nd. That the right of legislating for “the protection and welfare of the ryots” was reserved to Government at the time of the Permanent Settlement, and that the object of the present Bill is, “to restore the great body of the cultivators to the position which they held in 1793, under the ancient land law and custom of the country.”

3rd. That quite apart from the rights of the zemindars and ryots at the time of the Permanent Settlement, the Government is entitled to resort to exceptional legislation if a necessity for such legislation has arisen, and that the condition of the Behar peasantry is such as to justify exceptional legislation.

12. Your petitioners will consider each of these grounds in order; and first, with regard to the position of the zemindars before and after the Permanent Settlement.

13. It is not the intention of your Petitioners to enter into a long and profitless discussion, as to the original status of the zemindars of the country. When the British Government assumed the direct administration of Bengal and Behar in 1772, they at any rate found the zemindars in possession of large estates and exercising the ordinary rights of proprietors. Some of the Rajahs of Behar date the origin from times anterior to the conquest of Bengal by the Mahomedans, while others have received proprietary grants and titles of honour from the Emperor Akbar, who was a contemporary of Queen Elizabeth. During the long period of Mahomedan domination, their rights as proprietors were never questioned, and the fact, that in Behar the land is mainly held by Hindoo proprietors, shows how little the Mahomedans interfered with the vested rights of the people. Nor did the British Government, on succeeding to the administration of the country, make any change in the system or policy of their Mahomedan predecessors. The system was this: The Government claimed as the ruling power, a certain proportion of the produce of every beegha of land in the country. This proportion, whether paid in kind or estimated in money, was collected by the zemindars from the cultivators. It was the duty of the zemindar to pay into the treasury the amount assessed on his zemindary as the Government share of the produce; but subject to the payment of this amount, he exercised full proprietary rights over his tenantry. All that he collected from the ryots over and above the Government assessment was his own. The charge of the police and the administration of justice were in his hands, and there were no local tribunals to which the ryots could appeal for redress, if they desired to question the justice of his demands.

14. Upon the English Government assuming the direct administration of the country in 1772, the position of the ryots naturally attracted the attention of the authorities; but whatever may have been the opinion of individual officers, no attempt was ever made or countenanced to deprive the zemindars of their proprietary rights. In 1776 Mr. (afterwards Sir Phillip) Francis wrote:—

"It is proposed to secure to the ryots the perpetual and undisturbed possession of their lands. This language, I know, is popular, and has often been used to countenance and give a colour to acts of violence and injustice against the zemindars and other superior ranks of the natives. Before we give perpetual possession we ought to determine the property. This State does not consist of nothing but the ruler and the ryot, nor is it true that the ryot is proprietor of the land . . . but it does not follow that because the ryot has no direct permanent property in the land he should therefore have no right, or that no care should be taken to protect him. Without his assistance, the land is useless to the zemindar. If they are left to themselves they will soon come to an agreement in which each party will find his advantage; the pottah (lease) is the evidence and security of this voluntary agreement. In the present state of the country the ryot has in fact the advantage over the zemindar. When so much land lies waste and so few hands are left for cultivation, the peasant must be courted to undertake it; at all events the interposition of Government between them should have no object but to enforce the execution of their respective engagements. To dictate the specific terms of any lease is an invasion of the rights of property. Government after assessing the zemindar or landlord according to his portion of the public revenue, is supposed to enter into the management of his patrimony and to prescribe to him the rates at which he shall be obliged to parcel it out to his tenants. The idea of guarding the ryots against arbitrary exactions is just and attainable, though not by the method proposed."

15. This minute of Mr. Francis is important, as showing that as early as the year 1776 the attention of the Indian Government was directed to the condition of the ryots; and that there were not wanting, even in those days, men who advocated very similar views to those entertained by the framers of the present Bill.

16. The years which followed 1776 were years of anxious inquiry into the condition of the country, into the rights of the classes interested in the land, and the best means for securing to those classes their just immunities and rights. The opinions which that inquiry elicited were various and conflicting; and much of the confusion which has arisen on this subject, has been owing to these individual opinions being referred to, as authoritative declarations of the respective rights of the zemindars and the ryots. These individual opinions were doubtless considered by Lord Cornwallis's Government, and the final results of Lord Cornwallis's deliberations are contained in the serious of legislative enactments, which finally declared what the respective rights of the zemindars and ryots were. The most important of these regulations were passed in 1793, and it is by these and the subsequent regulations and Acts of Legislature that the rights of both zemindars and ryots must be judged.

17. The first question is, do these regulations, framed after the elaborate inquiries which took place between 1776 and 1793, recognise the zemindars as having a proprietary interest in the soil? The fourth section of Regulation I of 1793 is as follows:—

"The Governor General in Council declares to the zemindars, independent talukdars, and other actual proprietors of land, that no alteration will be made in the assessment which they have respectively engaged to pay, but that they and their heirs and lawful successors will be allowed to hold their estates at such assessment for ever."

And section seven, clause two, of the same regulation, is as follows:—

"The Governor General trusts that the proprietors of land, sensible of the benefits conferred upon them by the public assessment being fixed for ever, will exert themselves in the cultivation of their lands under the certainty, that they will enjoy exclusively the fruit of their own good management and industry. To discharge the revenues at the stipulated periods without delay or evasion, and to conduct the themselves with good faith and moderation towards their dependent talukdars and ryots, are duties at all times indispensably required from the proprietors of land, and a strict observance of these duties is now more than ever incumbent upon them, in return for the benefits which they will themselves derive from the orders now issued."

18. It will be observed that this regulation did not profess to make the zemindars proprietors, it merely declared their existing status as hereditary proprietors. It acknowledged their existing proprietary rights, but it did not profess to give them any rights which they had not previously enjoyed. The great and only boon which the Permanent Settlement conferred upon the zemindars was that it declared the assessment upon their estates to be fixed for ever. But in return for this concession the Legislature placed certain restrictions upon the proprietary rights which the zemindars had previously exercised, in order to secure and protect the under-tenants and ryots and other cultivators of the soil.

19. In the first place, certain specified under tenants (Mokurruridars and Istemrardars) were declared entitled to hold their lands at fixed rents, and these rents the zemindars were prohibited from enhancing. It is to be observed that these Mokurruridars and Istemrardars were the only tenants whose rents were declared to be fixed, and the fact that no other class of ryots was recognised by the Legislature as being entitled to hold at fixed rent, is a pretty clear indication that no such class then existed.

20. With regard to the remaining lands of the estate (i. e., the land not covered by these specially favoured under-tenants), the zemindar was declared entitled to let them in whatever manner he thought proper, subject however to certain restrictions, of which the following may be noticed:—

1st. As the chief cause of oppression in times past had been the uncertainty of the zemindar's demand, it was required that all zemindars should give pottahs, or leases, to their ryots specifying the exact sum which the ryot had to pay; and where the rent was payable, as in Behar, in kind, the leases were required to state the proportion in which the produce was to be divided.

2nd. The zemindars were deprived of their power of imposing, for the future, arbitrary cesses upon the ryots, and any sum exacted above the amount specified in the lease was to be recovered with a penalty of three times the amount by a suit in the newly established Civil Courts.

3rd. The form of the lease or pottah was prescribed by the Collector, but the terms of the lease, if not settled by the mutual agreement of the parties, were to be settled by the Civil Court, the Government disclaiming any right for interfering between the zemindars and their tenants.

4th. Zemindars were further required to give receipts for all sums received by them, and the withholding of proper receipts was punishable by a penalty recoverable in the Civil Court.

5th. The zemindars were prohibited from enforcing the rents due from absconding ryots from those ryots who remained.

6th. To guard against leases being given at an unduly low rent, it was further provided that no lease should be granted to a ryot for more than ten years.

7th. One further restriction was imposed upon the Bengal zemindars which prohibited them from cancelling the pottahs or leases of Khudkash ryot, unless the rent reserved by the lessee was below the Pergunnah rates, or unless a general measurement of the Pergunnah was made for the purpose of equalising and correcting the assessment. But this restriction did not apply to the zemindars of Behar, where rents were paid in kind, and the produce was divided in a fixed proportion between the zemindar and the ryot.

21. As a further protection to the ryots, the zemindars were deprived of the Civil and Criminal jurisdiction which they had previously exercised within the limit of their estates; and they were prohibited from taking cognisance of, or interfering in matters, within the jurisdiction of the newly-established Civil and Criminal Courts. They were further deprived of the police jurisdiction which they had previously exercised, and also of the power of confining and inflicting corporal punishment upon their ryots, to enforce the payment of rent.

22. The Regulations of 1793, therefore, establish the following propositions:—

Before the Permanent Settlement, the revenue payable by the zemindars to Government was uncertain, and liable to constant enhancement; after the Permanent Settlement the Government demand was fixed for ever. In return for this great concession, the zemindars were required to relinquish certain powers and rights which they had admittedly exercised, whether rightly or wrongly, for centuries before the establishment of British rule. The rents which they had previously compelled their ryots to pay had been arbitrary and uncertain; under the terms of the Permanent Settlement, the zemindars were required to grant leases, in which the amount of the rent was to be specifically stated; and in case the ryot disputed the fairness of the lease, the terms of the lease were to be settled by the Civil Court, and not dictated, as they had previously been, by the zemindar himself.

23. The right which the zemindar previously exercised of imposing arbitrary cesses upon the ryots was taken away, and a penalty prescribed for any such imposition.

24. The power of coercion which the zemindar previously possessed, was taken away, and the ryot could no longer be beaten or kept in confinement until he had satisfied the zemindar's demand.

25. Great as were the benefits conferred by the Permanent Settlement upon the zemindars, the benefits conferred upon the ryots were immeasurably greater. They were raised at once from the position of serfs to the position of free men. Instead of being exposed to arbitrary and uncertain exactions they were to receive leases, in which the amount of their rent was to be specifically stated, and they were no longer exposed to stripes and imprisonment, if they refused to satisfy the zemindars' demand.

26. It has been necessary to enter into these details, because the framers of the present Bill maintain that its provisions are not intended to infringe, but to effectuate the legislative enactments contained in the settlement Regulation of 1793. "The legislation of 1793," said the mover of the Bill, "left the rights of the ryots outstanding and undefined, and by so leaving them it tended to obscure them, to efface them, and in too many cases ultimately to destroy them." In other words, the object of the Bill is to revive, in the interests of the ryots, rights of the existence of which at any time there is no evidence but vague opinion, rights which had admittedly been obscured, effaced, and destroyed during the centuries of Mahomedan rule; rights which admittedly find no place in the legislative enactments of 1793, but which are now, after a lapse of a century, to be formulated and declared.

27. The zemindars, on the contrary, maintain that whatever rights the ryots were found to possess in 1793, were carefully ascertained and respected by the Legislature of that time, and that the rights which it is now proposed to confer upon them, are a direct infringement of the rights which the zemindars were declared to possess in 1793; rights which subsequent laws have confirmed and which have been exercised unquestioned for a century.

28. Your Petitioners will now proceed to consider how far the new rights created by the Bill in favour of the ryots, are an infringement of the rights of the zemindar as declared in the Permanent Settlement Regulations.

29. The first fundamental change made by the Bill is the creation of a class of privileged ryots who are called settled ryots; the Bill declaring that "every person who for a period of twelve years, whether before or after the commencement of the Act, has continuously held as a ryot, ryoti land in any village or estate, shall, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary, and though the land so held by him at different times may be different, be deemed to have become, on the expiration of that period, a settled ryot of that village or estate;" and it is further declared, that a settled ryot shall have a right of permanent occupancy in the land and a right to hold the land at a fair and equitable rent, the existing rent being deemed to be fair and equitable until the landlord can prove the contrary. The right of occupancy further carries with it a right of free sale of the land and of sub-letting the land without the permission of the landlord.

30. There is no pretence for saying that "settled ryots" were either recognised, or contemplated, or heard of, at the time of the Permanent Settlement. The only privileged ryots known at the time of the Permanent Settlement were the Khudkasht or resident hereditary ryots of Bengal, who were declared entitled to hold their lands at the established Pergunnah rate. But even this provision with regard to Khudkasht ryots was declared to be not applicable to Behar. So far therefore as Behar was concerned, there was no privileged class of ryots recognised at the time of the Permanent Settlement. It was not until 1859 that occupancy rights were created in Behar. Act 10 of 1859, Section 6, conferred a right of occupancy upon every ryot, in land which he had cultivated for twelve years and for which he had paid rent, provided that such ryot did not hold under a written lease which contained stipulations inconsistent with the accrual of a right of occupancy. The right of occupancy, therefore, so far as Behar was concerned, was the creation of the Act of 1859*; and it could not be acquired if the parties had entered into a stipulation to the contrary. Since 1859, when leases have been given, it has been usual to stipulate in the terms of the Act, that the tenant should surrender the land on the expiration of the lease; and such stipulations were contained not only in leases granted by the zemindars, but in the leases granted by the Government to the ryots in their Khas Mehals or private estates. The effect of the present change in the law will be to defeat all existing contracts and to give to almost every ryot in Behar a right of occupancy, at what is called a fair and equitable rent. For it will be observed that this clause of the Bill has retrospective effect, not only prohibiting future but cancelling past contracts.

31. The avowed object of the Permanent Settlement was to encourage landlords and tenants to enter into written contracts with each other. The landlord was required to give leases or pottahs to all his tenants, and there is not a Regulation or Act in the Statute Book, in which the Government has ever claimed the right of interfering between a landlord and his tenant. What, then, are the peculiar circumstances which have now occurred to justify such interference? The advocates of the Bill maintain, that unless contracts between a landlord and a tenant are prohibited, the tenant will contract himself out of the occupancy rights which this Bill will confer upon him. But even if he does, what injustice will be done him? Act 10 of 1859, which originally created these rights, permitted them to be controlled by contract; and it is admitted that there has been of late years, to quote the words of Sir Ashley Eden, "an extraordinary improvement in the condition of the people." Why, then, is this freedom of contract, under which the agricultural classes have so marvellously improved, to be prohibited for the future? Is under the existing laws of free contracts, the improvement of the people has been so marked, what justification can there be in 1883 for depriving the zemindars of their right of stipulating as to the terms upon which their lands are to be let?

32. The justification put forward by the framers of the Bill is not, that any pressing necessity has suddenly arisen for the enactment of this unheard of prohibition, but that at the time of the Permanent Settlement in 1793, the zemindars did not enjoy that freedom of contract, which they have been permitted to exercise for the past ninety years; and that in now enacting that contracts between landlords and tenants shall be prohibited, they are simply reverting to the customs and practices of 1793. It is not necessary to discuss the dangerous principle which are involved in this proposition. If rights which have been exercised uninterruptedly for ninety years are to be thus summarily set aside, what security is there that any other private rights will be respected? Leaving, however, aside these grave political considerations, your Petitioners deny that there is any foundation for the assertion that a zemindar in 1793 could not let his lands to his ryots on any terms that he pleased.

33. It is urged by the supporters of the Bill—first, that at the time of the Permanent Settlement, no ryot could be ejected from his land so long as he paid his rent; and secondly, that this rent was calculated according to a fixed and established Pergunnah rate, and it is, therefore, argued that freedom of contract could not have existed in 1793, and that the Legislature is justified in prohibiting contracts between landlords and tenants in 1883, because practically no such freedom existed in 1793.

34. With regard to the first proposition that a zemindar could not eject a ryot in 1793, it is admitted that there is no declaration in the Settlement Regulations to that effect; but reliance is placed upon certain opinions expressed by officers of Government, and particularly upon a minute of Lord Cornwallis, written in 1790, in which the following passage occurs:—

* NOTE.—The Act of 1859 insisted upon the payment of rent, as a necessary condition for acquiring a right of occupancy, under the present Bill a right of occupancy can be acquired, though no rent has been paid—Act 10. of 1859, Section 7.

"Whoever cultivates the land, the zemindar can recover no more than the established rent, which in most places is fully equal to what the cultivator can afford to pay. To permit him to dispossess one cultivator for the sole purpose of giving the land to another, would be vesting him with a power to commit a wanton act of oppression from which he could derive no benefit." In this minute Lord Cornwallis was discussing the question of arbitrary cesses, and was answering an objection of Mr. Shore, that to prohibit the imposition of these cesses, was tantamount to saying that a zemindar was not to raise the rents of his estate. This Lord Cornwallis denied, and in the paragraph preceding the one from which the above extract is taken, he thus expresses himself:—"If Mr. Shore means that after having declared the zemindar proprietor of the soil, in order to be consistent, we have no right to prevent his imposing new abwabs or taxes on the lands in cultivation, I must differ with him in opinion, unless we suppose the ryots to be the absolute slaves of the zemindars, every beegah of land possessed by them must have been cultivated under an express or implied agreement, that a certain sum should be paid for each beegah of produce and no more. Any abwab or tax imposed by the zemindar over and above that sum is not only a breach of that agreement but a direct violation of the established laws of the country . . . neither is prohibiting the landholder to impose new abwabs or taxes on the lands in cultivation tantamount to saying to him that he shall not raise the rents of his estate. The rents of the estate are not to be raised by the imposition of new abwabs or taxes on any beegah of land under cultivation; on the contrary, they will in the end be lowered by such impositions, for when the rate of assessment becomes so oppressive as not to leave the ryot a sufficient share of the produce for the maintenance of his family, and the expenses of cultivation, he must at length desert the land." Lord Cornwallis was simply considering the case of a ryot who was paying the rent agreed upon between himself and his zemindar, and upon whom, so long as that agreement existed, no further imposition could legally be placed. He certainly was not considering the case of a ryot, whose rent, on the expiration of his agreement, was being re-adjusted either by the measurement of his land, or the valuation of the crops grown upon it. To such a case Lord Cornwallis's remarks had no application.

35. If, moreover, it had been Lord Cornwallis's intention to prohibit a zemindar from ejecting a ryot, under all circumstances, he would certainly have made that intention clear in the Permanent Settlement Regulations, which he afterwards promulgated in 1793. In those Regulations, no restriction whatever is placed upon the power of the zemindars with regard to ejecting a ryot who refuses to pay the rent demanded. On the contrary, the power which the zemindars possessed of measuring their ryots' lands and assessing these lands according to the nature of the crops grown upon them, necessarily gave the zemindar power to eject a ryot who refused to pay the assessment imposed. In the preamble of Regulation 44 of 1793, there occurs the following passage: "It is essential that proprietors of land should have a discretionary power to fix the revenue payable by their defendant talukdars and to grant leases or fix the rents of their lands, for a term sufficient to induce their dependent talukdars, under-layers, and ryots to extend and improve the cultivation of their lands." If the ryots or any class of ryots were entitled to continued and undisturbed possession, these words would have no meaning as applied to them. And this was the conclusion of the Court of Directors who in 1819 wrote as follow:—"One inference seems unavoidable that the persons with whom the Permanent Settlement was made and those who by inheritance or purchase may succeed them, are authorised by the existing law to oust even the hereditary ryots, from possession of their lands, when the latter refuse to accede to any terms of rent which may be demanded of them, however exorbitant."*

36. There is therefore absolutely no foundation for the proposition, that a zemindar could not in 1793 eject a ryot who refused to pay the rent assessed upon him.

37. With regard to the other ground upon which the freedom of contract is sought to be prohibited, namely, that at the time of the Permanent Settlement there was a fixed established rate of rent, and that therefore the Legislature are now justified in prohibiting the zemindars from entering into any agreement for an increased rent; a very few words will suffice to show the hollowness of the argument and the untenability of the grounds upon which it is based.

38. Up to the time of the Permanent Settlement the Government demand upon the zemindars was admittedly variable. When an increased assessment was imposed upon an estate, the zemindar imposed an increased assessment upon his ryots; and it is admitted that at the time of the Permanent Settlement, owing to the numerous cesses which had been imposed, no ryot knew from year to year what rent he would have to pay. The demand of the Government upon the zemindars was fluctuating and uncertain, and the demand of the zemindar upon the ryot was equally fluctuating and uncertain; with a fluctuating and uncertain demand, a fixed rent or fixed pergunnah rate was an impossibility, for it would necessarily vary according to the demand.

39. Nor did the Regulations of 1793 attempt to fix a pergunnah rate; all that the Legislature did, was to require the zemindars to consolidate the cesses and the rent into one lump sum, and to specify in the pottah or lease what the consolidated rent was. If it had been the intention of Government to establish a pergunnah rate which the ryots were to pay for all time, the Legislature would have expressed their intention in some of the Settlement Regulations. Those Regulations declared that certain tenure holders were to hold at fixed rates for ever, but no such declaration was made in favour of the ryot. On the contrary, the Regulations contain provisions for allowing the zemindars to measure the ryots' land and to assess the land according to the value of the crops grown upon it. The zemindars were further enjoined to introduce more expensive crops in order to obtain an increase of rent, on the assurance that they were to enjoy the fruits of their own good management. If it had been the intention of the Legislature to establish a fixed pergunnah rate, they certainly would not have allowed that rate to be increased, because a ryot grew a more valuable crop than the usual staple articles of the country. But so far from the Legislature intending to fix a per-gunnah rate which all ryots were to pay, it is admitted, that in the years which followed the Permanent Settlement, rents were, as a matter of fact, constantly raised and adjusted, both by the zemindars in their estates and the Government in their Khas Mehals; and in 1812 a Regulation was passed, not to prohibit enhancements which the Legislature would have done, if enhancements had been illegal, but to provide a procedure which was to be followed in cases where enhanced rents were demanded. So far indeed from the zemindars not possessing the right of enhancing rents under the Permanent Settlement Regulations, the great charge of the advocates of tenant right against the Permanent Settlement has always been that it did not deprive the zemindars of this power, but left "them to make their own settlement with the ryots on such terms as they might choose to require." There can therefore be no question, that the proposed restrictions on the zemindars' power of enhancement is an innovation and invasion of their vested rights, and the reasons upon which this invasion is sought to be justified, are absolutely groundless.

40. The Bill further proposes to fix a uniform and maximum rate of rent for the whole country. This maximum is fixed at one-fifth of the average annual value of the gross produce of the land in staple crops. It was stated by the mover of the Bill, that it was originally intended to fix the maximum rate at one-fourth, but at the last moment the Lieutenant Governor suggested that the maximum should be one-fifth. No indication has been given of the grounds upon which the proportion of one-fourth was fixed in the first place, or upon what grounds it was then suddenly reduced to one-fifth. In his Minute of Dec. 8, 1789, par. 4, Mr. Shore states that the proportion paid by "the cultivators of the soil may be reckoned at a half, or it may be nearer perhaps to three-fifths, of the gross produce." If, therefore, the object of the Bill is to restore the ryots to the position they occupied at the time of the Permanent Settlement, the maximum rate should clearly be fixed at three-fifths instead of one-fifth of the gross produce.

41. The objections to fixing a uniform and maximum rate for all lands in so extensive a country is obvious. It may be too low for some estates, too high for others. It will be especially disastrous to the ryots whose rates are low, as they are in Eastern Bengal. Once let Government fix a maximum rate, and no zemindar will rest, until he has run up his rents to the prescribed limit. But rents will adjust themselves, if let alone; at any rate, before a maximum rate is fixed, it is but reasonable to ask that an inquiry may be made as to the circumstances of particular districts. There are resumed estates in Behar, which Government settled and afterwards sold, in which the Government revenue alone amounts to three-eighths of the gross produce, and yet it is proposed to fix one-fifth as the maximum rate.

42. The manner in which this maximum rate was first fixed at one-fourth and then without any apparent reason reduced to one-fifth, affords a striking illustration of the manner in which the Bill has been prepared. No inquiry is made as to what existing rents are, or whether these rents press unduly upon the tenants, but suddenly and without warning the zemindars find, that in future a maximum rate of rent is fixed for the whole country, without any reference to local circumstances or the conditions of particular estates.

43. Another most grave and disastrous innovation introduced by the Bill is the provision which allows settled ryots to transfer by sale or otherwise their occupancy rights, without the sanction or permission of the zemindar. It is not pretended, that any ryot had the right to transfer his holding at the time of the Permanent Settlement. On the contrary, the regulations clearly lay down that the ryot's interest is not a transferable one. The only justification attempted for this innovation is that in some parts of Bengal certain occupancy rights are transferable by custom. But in Behar there is no such custom nor is it even pretended that there is such a custom. The only transferable ryoti tenures known in Behar are the hereditary tenures called Gusistha, which are principally found in Shahabad, but the transfer of occupancy rights in Behar is absolutely unknown.

44. In Behar, rents were originally paid in kind, and in many parts of Behar both landlords and ryots tenaciously adhere to this system at the present time. But if a ryot who pays his rent, by delivering to the zemindar a fixed proportion of the crop is allowed to transfer the land without the zemindar's permission, what guarantee is there that the new tenant will be a competent cultivator? The old tenant may, under the Bill, transfer his land to whomsoever he pleases. He may sell it to a mahajun or money-lender, or to an indigo planter. If the money-lender buys, he will not cultivate himself; he will sublet the land to an inferior class of tenants, and to these tenants the zemindar will have to look for his proportion of the produce. Can anything be more unreasonable? A zemindar may trust a substantial ryot whom he has himself placed upon the land, but what guarantee has he that the new tenant, who is thrust upon him against his will, will be an honest man and give him a fair proportion of the crop?

45. If, however, the settled ryot transforms the land to an indigo planter, the position of the zemindar will be infinitely worse. It is well known that the indigo planters are in favour of allowing settled ryots to sell their land, for the avowed reason that it will enable them to buy up these occupancy holdings, and so extend the cultivation of indigo.

46. Moreover, the zemindar whose rents are payable in kind, cannot take a share of a crop of indigo. It would be useless to him, and the indigo planter would naturally insist upon commuting the rent in kind to a money payment. The question of commutation would have to be settled, and a civil suit with its attendant worry and expense would be the result. Nor would the position of the zemindar of a village where money rents prevailed be much better; so long as the ordinary crops are grown the zemindar can realise his rent by distraint, but when a settled ryot has transferred his land to an indigo planter, the zemindar is at once deprived of his right of distraint, for indigo is a crop which it would be useless to distraint. It is worthless as a marketable commodity, unless there are indigo planters near, to whom it can be sold for the purpose of manufacture.

47. The reasonableness of these objections is admitted by the framers of the Bill, and they have accordingly given to the zemindars a right of pre-emption whenever these occupancy rights are sold. But the right of pre-emption is simply a delusion and it has been purposely made so by the framers of the Bill. A zemindar, who exercises the right of pre-emption is placed by the Bill under special disqualification. He may buy out the ryot, but he cannot by his purchase acquire the ryot's occupancy rights. He is compelled, if he relets the land, to relet it to the new tenant on exactly the same terms and at the same rent as the old tenant, whom he has bought out, held. In the next place, the zemindar who exercises the right of pre-emption will subject himself to certain litigation, for he must either pay the amount at which the former tenant professes to be willing to sell, or bring a suit to have the value determined by the Civil Court. Under such circumstances it is obvious, that the right of pre-emption is a simple delusion and is of no practical use to the zemindar.

48. But the conceding to settled ryots the right to sell their land will not only be a wanton invasion of the right of the zemindars, but will be prejudicial to the best interests of the country. The persons who will buy up these occupancy rights in Behar will undoubtedly be money-lenders and indigo planters. The mahajuns or money-lenders will not cultivate themselves but will sublet to an inferior class of ryots who will be mere tenants-at-will with no right of occupancy. The consequence will be that in a few years the settled ryot will have disappeared and the land will be held by non-cultivating mahajuns, and the ryots under them, who will be the real cultivators, will absolutely have no rights at all; and the very evils which the Bill is intended to remove will be reproduced in a much more aggravated form.

49. That this is the tendency of the measure was admitted by the learned mover of the Bill, who said, when introducing it into Council, "that the powers of transferring which the Bill recognises may in time lead to a state of things in which the great bulk of the actual cultivators would be not occupancy ryots but under ryots with little protection from the law, is indeed within the range of possibility; but if such a state of things may ever arise, we may rest assured that the Government of the day will know how to deal with it." It is admitted, therefore, that the Bill will reproduce the very evils it was intended to remove, and the rights, which the zemindars at present possess over the land, will be taken from them merely to fall into the hands of the mahajuns and indigo planters who will thus become the real proprietors of the soil. It need hardly be pointed out how seriously the present value of the zemindar's estates will be depreciated. The zemindar will be reduced to the position of a cypher. The whole interest will be vested in the settled ryot, or in those who purchase the interest of the settled ryot. The zemindar is the only person who cannot acquire this interest. The mahajun may acquire it, the indigo planter may acquire it, but the zemindar cannot acquire it. The only method by which a zemindar can in future possess any proprietary interest in land, will be by buying up the occupancy rights of the ryots of a rival zemindar. As a settled ryot of a rival zemindar he will be a proprietor, but he can have no proprietary rights on his own estate.

50. It is also to be observed that in the North Western Provinces bordering upon Behar, occupancy ryots are not permitted to transfer their holdings, and no reason has been given for adopting in Behar a different rule to that which obtains in the North Western Provinces. Moreover the Behar Rent Commission, which was appointed in 1878 to consider the general question of rent law and procedure, were opposed to making any change in the existing law on this subject; and the opinion of the Commission is shared by some of the most distinguished Government officers in the province. In the face of these facts, what justification can there be for introducing an innovation which is a wanton invasion of the rights of the zemindars?

51. The reasons which have been urged against giving the ryot the power of free sale of his land, equally applies to the provisions regarding subletting.

52. The next question which it is necessary to notice are the provisions of the Bill relating to rents in kind. The system, which in Behar is known as the Bhowli or Batai system divides the produce between the zemindar and the ryot in the proportion of one-half to the zemindar and one-half to the ryot. In some places where the zemindar maintains irrigation and other works, he receives nine-sixteenths. These proportions have existed from time immemorial.

53. The Bill, however, proposes notwithstanding any contract or custom to the contrary, to limit the zemindar's share to one-half, and it is further proposed to allow the ryot to commute payment in kind to a money payment. No reason is given for thus depriving the zemindars of one-sixteenth of their rent. It was the rate in force at the time of the Permanent Settlement, and it has been paid without objection ever since. The ryots have never complained that the proportion taken by the zemindar is excessive, and the leading Government officials in Behar are in favour of maintaining the present system and are opposed to forcing on commutations by legislative interference. The proposed change therefore is not only uncalled for, but is supported by no single class, whether officials, zemindars, indigo planters, or ryots, in the province of Behar.

54. Another innovation to which the zemindars of Behar strongly object, is the withdrawal of the Bill of the present right of distraint and the substitution in its place of the ordinary Civil Court procedure of attachment before judgment. Under the present law a zemindar can himself attach the crop in the first instance, and having done so, he applies to the Civil Court for its sale, a penalty being imposed upon a ryot who removes the crop without the orders of the Court. Under the proposed Bill the proprietor must in the first instance apply to the Civil Court, and while he is so doing, the ryot will have time to remove his crop and no penalty is imposed on him for doing so; and when the Civil Court process is finally issued there will be no crops to attach. The reason assigned for introducing this change is, that "the existing law of distraint is an offset of English law, which has been abused in Behar, and not always applied in a regular manner in other parts of the country." So far, however, from the law of distraint being of English origin, it is indigenous to the country. The right existed before the Permanent Settlement, and was recognised and sanctioned by one of the Settlement Regulations of 1793. The right of distraint exists in the bordering native state of Nepal, and is in no way peculiar to British India. But whether an offset of English law or not, it has at any rate been exercised by the landlords of Behar both before and since the Permanent Settlement. Without the power of distraint the realisation of rent will be difficult, if not impossible. It is not that the zemindars only are in favour of the existing law, but every revenue officer of Government in Behar is in favour of it. Mr. MacDonnell, the Collector of Sarun, and who is now one of the Secretaries to Government, writes:—

"I have had a good deal of experience of the use and abuse of the right to distraint. I know it has been perverted to ends foreign to its object, but I know also that if a magistrate-collector only exercises with attention, perseverance, and firmness the legal powers with which he is vested, such misuse of the right can be checked. Instead of abolishing the right of restraint forthwith, I would retain it in the case of occupancy holdings. I want to avoid bringing occupancy rights to auction sale as much as possible. Such sales would indeed benefit the indigo industry, as the Indigo Planters' Association seems to recognise, but though I am anxious to do what I can for that industry, there are larger ends to be secured. The security of the Government revenue depends on the speedy realisation of the landlord's rent, the prosperity of the Province depends on the prevalence of harmony between zemindars and ryots. The right of distraint is an immemorial custom which effectually secures the first point, while distraining a ryot's crop sets the ryot less against the zemindar than a suit in Court to sell him up would do. Passing, however, from occupancy to non-occupancy holdings, I cannot but express amazement at the credulity of the Commissioners that, without a right to distraint, zemindars could never collect their rents. I speak on this point with the intimate knowledge derived from the personal supervision of Ward's Estates, and the personal management of Government Khas Mehals. Without the exercise of the right of distraint of the crops of ryots who are here to day and away to morrow, or without the knowledge on the ryot's part that such a right exists and may be immediately exercised, a zemindar has but small chance of getting his rents."

55. Mr. Edgar, the Collector of Chumparun writes as follows:—

"It is perhaps now needless for me to state in detail my reasons for strenuously opposing the abolition of distraint in Behar. But as the representatives of the planting interest have been and are strongly in favour of the abolition, it may be just as well to record what I believe would be the effect of the measure on indigo planters. I hold it to be certain that the first result of the abolition of distraint would be a general refusal on the part of the ryots to pay at least recently enhanced rents, and in many cases a refusal to pay any rent whatever. Now, this would scarcely affect planters whose primary object is not to realise rents, but to grow indigo, and who in many cases have to pay the ryots, as the price of their indigo, an amount nearly equal to the rent payable by the ryots. The result would be that landlords would get the rents due from the indigo thikas in full, and diminished or possibly no rents whatever from their remaining lands, and that the indigo planters would become masters of the situation. Instead of having to pay heavily for thikas as they do at present, they would be competed for as the only profitable tenant."

56. It is needless on the part of your Petitioners to add anything to the above extracts, to show how utterly uncalled for and unjust to the zemindars of Behar is the proposal to do away with the right of distraint, and substitute in its place the tedious and expensive procedure of the Civil Courts.

57. Your Petitioners also strongly object to another provision of the Bill which introduces an arbitrary classification of all the land in the province as zerat land, or the private land of the proprietor, and ryoti land, or the land destined for the occupation of ryots. The zerat or private land of the zemindars is to be limited to the land which is recognised by a village custom* to be zerat land, or which has been held by a proprietor as zerat for twelve continuous years before the commencement of this Act. The two different descriptions of land are to be demarcated and surveyed by Government at the joint expense of the zemindars and ryots; and no land which has once been demarcated as ryoti, can ever under any circumstances become the private land of the zemindar. A ryot may desert his holding, and the land may be thrown upon the zemindar's hand, and yet, though the land is his own and no one has any right in it or claims any right in it, the zemindar cannot add it to his private land, but must keep it separate and distinct. In other words, the Bill proposes to give a status to the land itself, apart from ownership; to declare that land, in which no one but the zemindar has any right, or claims any right, shall not be in the full sense of the term, the zemindar's land.

58. It must be remembered that in Behar there are still considerable tracks of waste land, and in those parts of the province bordering on the large rivers, large accretions are yearly made to estates by alluvion, and in these alluvion accretions and waste lands no one has any interest but the zemindar. He can make whatever arrangement he pleases for bringing them into cultivation; but by the provisions of the Bill all these waste and alluvial lands will at once become ryoti lands, and the zemindars' interest in these lands will be as much limited, as in the lands already held by settled ryots. It is intelligible to limit a proprietor's right in land, in which other persons claim some subordinate interest, but to limit a man's right in his own undisputed land, is an innovation which has now for the first time been suggested.

59. Your Petitioners further object to another provision of the Bill which authorises the Government to interfere and settle the rates of rent in cases of dispute between the landlord and his tenants. The Bill gives the revenue officers of Government the same powers of settling a zemindar's estate, as they possess of settling a Government estate; and your Petitioners strongly object to this power being given to the Government, as it will practically take out of the hands of the landowners, and place in the hands of the settlement officers of Government, the entire adjustment of the rent of their estates.

60. Your Petitioners would further point out, that the Government have been very careful to protect against the provisions of the Bill their own interests as proprietors, by providing that the Bill shall not apply to certain specified districts in which there are large Government estates and even in those districts to which the Act extends, it is specially provided that it shall not affect the powers and duties of the settlement officers of Government nor the procedure for realising rents in Government estates; but no reason is assigned why Government should enjoy a summary procedure for realising their rents which is denied to the zemindars.

61. Having shown, as your Petitioners submit they have, that the sweeping changes proposed by the Bill are a wanton invasion of the rights and privileges which they have enjoyed for ages, and which the Permanent Settlement of 1793 confirmed and declared, your Petitioners will now consider whether the state of the peasantry of Behar is such as to warrant this exceptional and one-sided legislation. It is not pretended that either the zemindars or the ryots of Behar have asked for this Bill or have at any time sought the interference of the Legislature. The work is the spontaneous act of the Government. The correspondence which was published with the Bill, the Statement of its Objects and Reasons, leave your Petitioners absolutely in the dark as to the causes which have put the Government in motion.

62. The first intimation that the Behar zemindars received of any change being contemplated in the law was the appointment of the Behar Rent Commission in 1878. This Commission consisted of a number of official and non-official members; but no evidence was laid before the Commission to show that the condition of the peasantry was such as to require radical changes in the law; nor did the Commission themselves suggest that any radical changes should be made. They suggested certain improvements in the system of zemindari accounts, the cheapening of registrations, the simplification of the distraint law, and the introduction of certain other regulations of minor importance, but they never suggested that the zemindars should be prevented from making agreements with their ryots, or that a new class of ryots should be created with a permanent and transferable interest in the land. With regard to occupancy rights they merely followed upon the lines of Act 10 of 1859, and provided more effectual guarantees for the maintenance of those rights when acquired; and with regard to enhancement, they considered it sufficient to recommend, that all agreements to pay an enhanced rent should be in writing and registered. But with the liberty of contract they in no way interfered; and they further vetoed the proposal to render occupancy rights transferable by sale. The violent proposals of the present Bill certainly receive no countenance from the proceedings of the Behar Commission. If, however, the Government had any charges to bring against the zemindars of Behar in 1878, it is but reasonable to suppose that those charges would have been investigated by the Commission; or if the Government had even contemplated, in 1878, the innovations proposed in the present Bill, it is but reasonable to suppose that those proposals would have been submitted for the consideration of the Commission. But if these changes were not thought necessary or expedient in 1878, what has occurred in the interval to justify their introduction to 1883? The testimony of Sir Ashley Eden in 1881 to the improved condition of the peasantry of Behar has already been quoted, and it certainly seems strange that in less than two years afterwards the state of the same peasantry should be reported as deplorable, when a justification is required for this exceptional legislation. The zemindars of Behar emphatically deny that the condition of the peasantry is deplorable. They believe that the condition of the cultivating classes is yearly improving, and will bear comparison with the peasantry of other countries and of other parts of India. Behar, no doubt, suffers from a greatly redundant population, but poverty is not felt by the cultivating classes, but by the labourers who have no land, and who prefer to stay at home in their villages to seeking employment elsewhere. It is upon this superabundant labouring population and not upon the cultivators that the pressure falls in the time of scarcity and famine.

63. But, even assuming that the state of the agricultural classes of Behar is deplorable, can this state be fairly attributable to the zemindars? Are the zemindars responsible for the social habits of the people, for their improvident expenditure upon marriages and funeral ceremonies, for the minute distribution of land under the Mitakshara and Mitthila law of inheritance, and are not these causes to be taken into account when the material condition of the people is considered?

64. A general reduction of rent will neither enforce habits of prudence in the cultivators, nor afford additional employment to the labouring classes who have no land at all. The present measure can only be justified on the clearest proof that rents in Behar are abnormally high. Your Petitioners emphatically deny that they are, and no attempt has been made to controvert the truth of your Petitioners' assertion. The Government have neither made a valuation of the Province, nor ascertained what the rates of rent are! Nothing of the sort has been done or even attempted to be done. One-third of the land of the Putna Division is held by five or six large zemindars, and it is notorious that in all these zemindari estates, the rates of rent are extremely moderate. Two of these estates have only recently passed out of the hands of Government as representing the Court of Wards, and the Government, so far from finding rents too high in these estates, actually raised them in many cases. There may, of course, be isolated instances in which rents have been unduly raised, either by fraud or coercion, but these are isolated cases to be dealt with by the Courts and not by the Legislature. To prohibit the whole body of the zemindars of a Province from entering into agreements with their ryots, because some isolated individuals have abused the freedom of contract, is a remedy which has never before been even dreamt of or suggested.

65. The ryots of Behar need no exceptional legislation. Many of them are Brahmins and Rajpoots fully acquainted with their privilege and legal rights, and it is incredible that they should never have complained, if they had been subjected to undue exactions at the hands of their zemindars.

66. Your Petitioners have now laid their case before the Honourable House, and they submit that the Bill, of which they have so much cause to complain, is a grave and uncalculated-for invasion of their rights, and there is absolutely no justification for the violent changes which it will introduce.

62. Your Petitioners would further respectfully say that they have done nothing to deserve such treatment at the hands of the British Government. They have always been conspicuously loyal to the British Crown. During the time of difficulty at the beginning of the century, and during the more troublous days of 1857, the zemindars of Bengal and Behar placed themselves, their influence, and their wealth, ungrudgingly at the disposal of the Government. But if this wealth and this influence are destroyed, to what class of the community will the Government in future look for support? If the zemindars, whose welfare has always been bound up with the British Government, are sacrificed to visionary theories, what class of the community will be able in future to repose with confidence, on—what has up to the present time been inviolable the honour, and good faith of the British Government? And therefore, your Petitioners humbly pray your Honourable House for protection and redress, and that your Honourable House will take into consideration this humble petition, and that it may adopt such measures by legislation, resolution, or otherwise, as in its wisdom it may deem just and proper, to maintain the existing rights of your Petitioners, and to express its disapproval of a policy, which, while confiscating the property of your Petitioners, will prove most detrimental to the true interests and prosperity of the country. And your Petitioners, as in duty bound will ever pray.

THE PETITION OF THE LANDHOLDERS OF BENGAL AND BEHAR AGAINST THE RENT BILL.

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned Members of the Central Committee of Landholders of Bengal and Behar, meeting in Calcutta, on behalf of themselves and of their fellow-landholders in the Bengal Provinces in British India, Humbly Sheweth,—That your Petitioners are filled with great anxiety, apprehension, and alarm at the introduction into the Council of His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General for making Laws and Regulations of a Bill entitled the Bengal Tenancy Bill, the manifest tendency of which seems to be to revolutionise the present relations between landlord and tenant in the provinces of Bengal and Behar, to redistribute landed property on a new and inequitable basis, and to fetter the freedom of action of all classes interested in agriculture by driving them at almost every step of their mutual transactions to Courts of Law and fiscal officers, and to foster dispute, litigation, and animosities in lieu of peace, harmony, and good-will among them.

2. That your petitioners do not wish to trouble your Honourable House with the history of that solemn covenant of the State, entitled the Permanent Settlement, which the late Honourable East India Company, with the sanction of the Imperial Parliament and the Crown, concluded with the zemindars as “actual proprietors of the soil,” under which the Government transferred its rights in the land to the said proprietors in consideration of revenue assessed at 10-11ths of the gross rental and fixed in perpetuity, nor with an account of the advantages—financial, economic, social, material, and political—which both the State and the people have derived from the operation of that Settlement for the last ninety years.

3. That, in consequence of the exorbitant assessment of the revenue under the Permanent Settlement, no vestiges of most of the old Zemindars with whom the covenant was made now exist; the land has been divided and sub-divided and purchased at the full market value by capitalists as a legitimate investment of capital in thorough good faith, and in perfect reliance upon the guarantees of rights and interests given by the Permanent Settlement Regulations.

4. That, until 1859, those guarantees had always been maintained inviolate, but in that year a law (Act 10 of 1859) was passed conferring new rights upon tenants under arbitrary and fanciful rules of description, and seriously clogging the rights of the landlord with regard to tenancy and settlement of rent, and imposing grave difficulties in the way of recovery of rent.

5. That although Act 10 of 1859 is a direct infringement of the Permanent Settlement Regulations, still it has been in operation for nearly a quarter of a century, and rights have grown up under it, which cannot now be fairly or equitably abrogated. Under it a large majority of the tenants have acquired rights of occupancy or fixity of tenure; rack-renting, which had hardly ever prevailed, has been altogether prevented, and even free sale of occupancy holdings has been recognised in some parts of the country with the consent of the landlord. So far Act 10 of 1859 has fulfilled its great object in improving the position of the tenant and securing his rights; but the landlord has not only lost some of his ancient and guaranteed rights, but has also been deprived of the ordinary facility of settling and realising the rent due to him, though he is burdened with the obligation of paying in the Government revenue by the sunset of the quarter-day, the expiration of which renders his estate liable to peremptory sale for default.

6. That in addition to the payment of the Government revenue, the landlords or zemindars are required under serious penalty to collect from tenants for the Government the Road and the Public Works' Cesses without any remuneration, and to make good all losses that arise from failures in collection on account of default due to bad seasons and other causes not attributable to them; and that in consideration of this service they were promised by three successive Lieutenant Governors of Bengal, Sir George Campbell, Sir Richard Temple, and Sir Ashley Eden, a simplified procedure for the recovery of rent. Some Bills had been introduced into the Bengal Legislative Council towards that end; but they were abandoned with a view to a general revision of the Rent Law.

7. That a Commission, consisting chiefly of Government officers, was subsequently appointed to report on the general revision of the Rent Law, but that Commission, without taking any evidence, or examining the parties interested as to the necessity of the amendment of the law, its direction, extent and scope, submitted an elaborate but extremely one-sided scheme, upon which is primarily based the present Bill. Some provisions of a highly objectionable character have also been introduced into the Bill, which had not been recommended even by the Rent Commission.

8. That one unfortunate incident has practically barred constitutional redress in respect to this Bill as far as the Legislature of this country is concerned. Your petitioners gratefully acknowledge that the fullest opportunity had been given to the public to discuss the original draft of the Bill at its initiatory stage before the Bengal Government, but neither, when material alterations and additions were made to it by the Bengal Government, or when it was finally laid before the Government of India, the public were allowed any such opportunity; on the contrary, they were positively refused access to it; and the sanction of the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India was taken, without giving the public or the parties interested the slightest opportunity of knowing or discussing its contents. Under the Indian Constitution H.M.'s Secretary of State is the highest controlling authority, and all laws passed by the Indian Legislature are liable to be revised and disallowed by him; but when his permission for a public measure is obtained beforehand, without previous public discussion, practically the public judgment is anticipated and barred. The leading principles of the present Bill having been already sanctioned by H.M.'s Secretary of State, its formal passage through the Indian Legislative Council will necessarily be a formality, and as the Government has a standing majority in that Council, the aggrieved can hardly hope for a fair hearing in matters, which are already matters of foregone conclusion.

9. That the Bill under notice is so voluminous and so comprehensive that it would be tedious to approach your Honourable House with a detailed criticism on it. Your Petitioners, would, therefore, crave permission to draw attention to the following summary of the leading principles of the Bill, to the innovations which it proposes to introduce, and to its general policy and tendency:—

1. The Bill proposes to effect a redistribution of land by making an allotment of it in a manner which neither past history nor present facts justify. It declares that all lands, except such as are in the private possession of the landlord in respect of which he may prove twelve years continuous occupation, shall be regarded, from the date of the introduction of the Bill, as the specific property or portion of the tenant class for habitation and cultivation, along with various incidental rights; that at the discretion of Government the lands may be surveyed and demarcated at the expense of both landlord and tenant; that conflicting claims to such lands shall be the subject of a summary investigation; and that the landlord, even in case of relinquishment of a tenancy, or of its purchase by him, if he wishes to let it, shall be bound to re-let it to a new tenant at the old rate and conditions, including permanent occupancy right. This is wholly an innovation, and makes a serious encroachment upon the proprietary rights of the landlord. It is in direct antagonism with past history, for when the Permanent Settlement was concluded, it was the land which sought the tenant, and not the tenant who sought the land; and this was particularly the case in the distribution of waste lands, which had been made over to the landlords or zemindars by way of compensation for the ruinous assessment of the settlement, and the proprietary right the reclaimed portion of which is now being taken away from them. The land had thus no such characteristic attached to it as now proposed, and the landlord was in no way fettered in the mode of the settlement of his estate. The proposed provision will not only deprive the landlord of his inherent right of re-entering upon land which a tenant may relinquish or which may lapse on the expiration of a lease, but will also give rise to serious dispute, misunderstanding and litigation between landlord and tenant in the establishment of their claims to different classes of lands.

11. At the time of the Permanent Settlement the resident hereditary tenant had fixity of tenure; custom had recognised that right, but no period had been fixed for the accrual of the right; by Act 10 of 1859, twelve years' continuous possession was declared to be the basis of occupancy right; and this provision was allowed retrospective effect; accordingly a squatter by mere efflux of twelve years' time acquired a right of occupancy, to the detriment of the rights of the actual proprietors of the soil guaranteed by the Permanent Settlement. This is the interpretation of that law by some of the highest Judicial Authorities, notably Sir Barnes Peacock, late Chief Justice of the Bengal High Court, and now a Member of H.M.'s Privy Council, and Sir Richard Garth, the present Chief Justice of Bengal; but this innovation has been the law of the land for nearly a quarter of a century, and although it involves gross injustice to your Petitioners and the class they present, they would submit to it as they have hitherto done. By far the largest number of tenants in Bengal have acquired a right of occupancy, and they do not wish to take it away. They, however, submit that it would be the height of injustice if the right of occupancy be further extended in the manner proposed in this Bill. It is now declared that any tenant, if he holds any land in any village or estate for twelve years consecutively, though the land so held by him at different times may have been different, shall be deemed to have become a settled tenant of that village or estate, and to have acquired the right of occupancy, though the last plot, in which the right will accrue, may have been held for a year or even for a day, and may exceed ten times the quantity previously held by him. The right of occupancy is also extended to tenants of the private domains of the landlord, unless there be a lease for a fixed period. Even as regards tenants-at-will, the provisions are so fenced with restrictions by providing compensation for disturbance that they will virtually become tenants with permanent occupancy right. The extension of the occupancy or tenant right in this arbitrary manner, without any compensation to the landlord, will be a serious encroachment upon his proprietary rights, and will be a deliberate infraction of the guarantees under which he has invested his capital in land. Indeed, it will have practically the effect of redistributing property in land on a new basis.

III. The tenant-right in Bengal, wherever it has existed, has always been heritable, but not transferable. Even Act 10, of 1859, did not make it transferable. But it has become transferable in some parts of the country with the mutual consent of the landlord and tenant. The growth of this custom, if desirable, may fairly be left to the natural operation of economic laws. But to force it by a legislative enactment would be alike detrimental to the proprietary rights of the landlord and to the material well-being of the tenant. The landlord will then cease to be the lord of the soil, which he has inherited or purchased by paying market value for it; he will lose his inherent and just right of choosing his own tenant; although directly liable to the State for revenue under the stern sunset law, by losing his hold upon his tenantry under this process of transfer or tenant-right without his consent, he will be driven to despair in the collection of his rent, and consequently to ruin. On the other hand the tenant, by acquiring the new freedom of sale, will, from excessive Government taxation, adverse seasons, thriftlessness and other causes, find a facility which will inevitably compass his ruin, as has been the case in some of the temporarily settled districts of the country where the transferability of the tenant-right is recognised, and where special laws have become necessary for the relief of the distressed agriculturists. Small capitalists, mostly money-lenders, will take the place of the present agriculturists, who will be reduced to mere day-labourers on their expropriated lands.

IV. With a view to counteract the evils to the landlord referred to above, the Bill gives him the right of pre-emption in case of the sale of a tenancy, but under such restrictions as to render it nugatory. In the first place, if the landlord wishes to buy it in, he must pay the full market value for it; that is to say, he must pay a fine, as it were, for exercising his proprietary right, and if he cannot agree with the tenant as to the price, he must go to Court. Even if he purchases it, he will not be allowed the same rights that will be accorded to an ordinary purchaser. After purchasing it, if he chooses to let it again, he must re-let it at the old rent to a new comer, who will ipso facto acquire the right of occupancy. An ordinary purchaser will not be bound to accord that right to his sub-tenant. So that a capitalist, who purchases an estate with a certain calculation of return, will get no quid pro quo for the sums he will have to lay out again for the purchase of tenancies, simply because the tenant is invested with a new right of transferability of his holding, without, of course, paying any consideration for it. Supposing that tenants in any large numbers choose to sell their holdings, and that other tenants choose to combine and withhold payment of rent, in order to compel the landlord to their own terms, a contingency by no means unfrequent, ruin will stare him in the face, and if he has not means he must submit to his fate, however unmerited, through an act of the Legislature, the paramount duty of which is to give equal protection to all classes of Her Majesty's subjects.

V. The determination of rent in Bengal has been generally discretionary. It is true that there was at one time a customary rate in many parts of the country, but the custom was varied so much by personal, local, and other considerations that the rate was practically left to the discretion and mutual understanding of the landlord and tenant. This fact has been brought to prominence by the recent inquiries made by Government as to tables of rates prevalent in different districts. When the Permanent Settlement was made in 1793, the rate of rent, it is on record, varied from three-fourths to one-half the value of the gross produce of the land. Until few years of the enactment of Act 10 of 1859, there was not much dispute between landlord and tenant about the rate of rent; the rise in the value of agricultural produce led to a demand for increased rent, and in order to bring the question of rent to a satisfactory judicial test, that Act declared that the rent shall be reasonable, fair, and equitable, and provided certain rules, for the guidance of the Courts. These rules, however, have proved so unworkable that the enhancement of rent through the judicial machinery has practically come to a deadlock. The gravity of the situation was represented by the landlords to Government, and the Government promised to redress their grievance. That promise is now about to be redeemed by the retrograde step indicated in this Bill. Under this Bill the rent of an occupancy tenant shall not exceed twenty per cent. of the gross value of staple products of the land. In other words, the landlord is practically reduced to one-fifth partner of his own property with his tenant. The rent due to him represents the shares of the Government and of himself, but this arbitrary limit will necessarily deprive him of all participation in the advantages which the progress of the country will confer upon all other classes of the community, but will always be subject to losses consequent on decadence and reverses. As regards the tenant-at-will, called in the Bill "ordinary ryot" the restrictions are so fenced round that practically there will be no enhancement of rent. In Behar, there are certain tenures called Bhooli tenures, analogous to Methyer tenures, and with regard to these the Bill actually sanctions reduction of the present rents. Thus the landlord will be practically deprived of the legitimate fruit of his capital, prudence, and good management, the enjoyment of which has been guaranteed to him by the Permanent Settlement.

VI. Contract is the basis of transactions in civilised life, the first step in advance over patriarchal habits, and essential to the success of social and moral progress. The tenant, as an agriculturist or as a member of society, is allowed perfect freedom of contract in all matters affecting him, whatever the difference in the status, intelligence, and influence of the contracting parties; but this Bill declares that he shall not be competent to enter into a contract respecting his tenant-right or the rent payable by him unless his contract for the latter is approved by a Revenue officer to be appointed by Government. This denial of the ordinary rights of a citizen to the tenant was never before known in this country. On the contrary, the Legislature had repeatedly encouraged the interchange of lease between landlord and tenant. The disability imposed upon the landlord for the sake of the fancied security of the tenant is still more arbitrary, unjust, and unjustifiable.

VII. The importation of foreign ideas in the regulation of the ordinary relation of life in an Oriental country, for which the people are not ripe, can only lead to harm. Never in this country, or at present within the British territories or in the Native States, is the practice of paying compensation to a tenant-at-will for relinquishment of his holding known or recognised.

As a rule, the class of tenants called tenant-at-will have not the means of making improvements, and therefore there has never been any question of compensation for disturbance raised. This innovation will not only be a serious interference with the proprietary rights of the landlord, but will plunge both landlord and tenant into deep litigation.

VIII. This Bill will foster litigation between the landlord and tenant at every step of their transactions. The landlord's office will be transferred to the Revenue Office and the landlord himself will be reduced to a mere annuitant. Whether the question be classification of land, determination of occupancy right, transferability of a tenancy, the exercise of the right of pre-emption on the part of the landlord, the settlement of rent, the payment of compensation to a tenant-at-will for disturbance, or the realisation of rent, there will be at every step expensive, harassing, and, not unfrequently, demoralising litigation. There will be no peace, no concord, no harmony, no goodwill between two such important members of the community as the landlord and tenant. Such embittered relations between them, as will be the inevitable result of the proposed Bill, cannot be conducive to the true well being of the State or society.

IX. As regards recovery of rent, the landlord had formerly power to call in the tenant to pay in his rent, failing which he could have him arrested by a simple application to the Court, followed by a summary inquiry. He could attach the property of the tenant and sell it after due notice. All suits for arrears of rent were heard before all others by the Civil Courts, and were finally transferred to the Collector for expedition. Act 10 of 1859 took away from the landlord the power of calling in his tenant. At first the Arrear Suit was triable by a Revenue Officer under a summary procedure, but now it has been made a regular civil suit, to be tried at a heavy cost under the regular civil procedure. That result is that ordinarily a rent suit is not disposed of within three months, and not unfrequently many months; and that if the tenants continue to withhold rent, the landlord must either succumb, or let his estate be sold for default. It is observable that this procedure is not applicable to the State in the recovery of its dues as landlord or as guardian of minor landlords. If the State with its vast resources, unequalled influence, and immense prestige, without the terrors of a Sunset Law for sale of estate in case of default of revenue, deems it necessary to have recourse to a summary law for the realisation of rent, how much more necessary is it for the private landlord for a like purpose? Although three successive Lieutenant Governors of Bengal, as stated above, had promised the landlords the simplification of the procedure for the recovery of rent, still no advance has been made in this Bill in that direction.

X. On the contrary, the Bill practically minimises the only facility which the present law provides for the speedy realisation of rent, viz., distraint. The process of distraint is now made at every step a process of Court, and by the time the Court's order may be obtained, the crops may be removed or disposed of, and the landlord's demand thus defeated. As the Bill has been framed, the landlord will, on the one hand, be made to forfeit his ancient, substantial, and valuable rights, but will, on the other, derive no benefit from it.

XI. Nor will the bona fide cultivator derive material benefit from the Bill. If he holds land under a superior landlord, his rent will be 20 per cent. of the gross produce of the land, but under a subordinate holder it will be 30 per cent. of the same, or 50 per cent. more than what he will pay to the former. He will acquire occupancy right under a superior landlord, but none under a subordinate holder, the latter being himself a tenant with occupancy right. So that without fixity of tenure, freedom of sale or security of fair rent, the actual cultivator of the soil under the operation of this Bill will be reduced to the miserable lot of a poor day-labourer.

XII. And this evil will be both multiplied and aggravated, as the Bill proposes to encourage subletting. If there is anything in the agricultural system of Bengal, which has tended to depress the condition of the actual cultivator of the soil, it is subletting. The actual agriculturist, who constitutes the lowest link of the chain, necessarily bears the whole burden, and the more the chain will be lengthened, the worse will be the fate of the actual cultivator of the soil. The new tenure-holders, who are created by the Bill, will be small proprietors, and it may be easily imagined whether small proprietors, themselves not agriculturists but absorbing agricultural profits, are more conducive to the welfare of the agricultural population than large proprietors. By-and-by, as the capital of these small tenure-holders will increase, they will also become larger proprietors. The result of the proposed Bill, will therefore be the destruction of the present proprietors, who have either inherited or paid fair market value for their estates, the creation of a new class of small proprietors, who will, for the most part, acquire their rights without paying for them, and the impoverishment and degradation of the actual cultivators of the soil.

Such, in brief, are the manifest tendencies of the proposed Bill, opposed to all principles of equity and fairness, to the guaranteed rights of the landlord, and to the best interests of the actual cultivators of the soil.

10. That no valid proof has been adduced showing the necessity for this wholesale, revolutionary, and confiscatory legislation. The Rent Commission, which originally drafted the Bill, as already stated, did not take any evidence on the subject. No less an authority than Sir Richard Garth, the eminent Chief Justice of Bengal, says:—"The Bill is calculated to deprive the landlord unjustly and unnecessarily, in my opinion, of rights which the Courts of law have always considered to be their due." Indeed, the whole Bill, whether as originally framed by the Rent Commission, or subsequently revised by the Government of India, has been based on arbitrary assumptions and gross predilections. Your Petitioners respectfully appeal to your Honourable House to consider whether rights and interests, worth millions upon millions of pounds, and consecrated by solemn acts of the State, and ratified by the sanction of nearly a century, should be sacrificed for sentimental and fanciful considerations.

11. That, on the other hand, there is abundant testimony to show that the tenantry of both Bengal and Behar have made rapid strides in progress and prosperity unhampered by the existing land-laws. The latest and most emphatic testimony is that of Sir Ashley Eden, the late Lieutenant Governor of Bengal. Thus, in 1877, after making a tour in the interior, he made the following remarks on the condition of the agricultural population of Bengal:—

"Great as was the progress which I knew had been made in the position of the cultivating classes, I was quite unprepared to find them occupying a position so different from that which I remember them to occupy when I first came to the country. They were then poor and oppressed, with little incentive to increase the productive powers of the soil. I find them now as prosperous, as independent, and as comfortable as the peasantry, I believe, of any country in the world; well-fed, well-clothed, free to enjoy the full benefit of their labour, and able to hold their own or obtain prompt redress for any wrong."

As regards the peasantry of Behar the same high functionary, in an address to a deputation of the Behar Landholders in 1881, said:—

"I can assure you that nothing has given me greater pleasure than to notice, as I have had ample opportunities of doing, the extraordinary improvement in the condition of the people. It is made manifest in a hundred ways daily, even to the most casual observer. I hear the same story from all classes, official and non-official, and it is a matter for general congratulation."

"This improvement is due to various causes: first and foremost, to several succeeding harvests, plentiful almost beyond the recollection of the present generation, and these full harvests followed years of trial and famine; next there has been, with growing prosperity, an increase in the value of land, a general awakening of the cultivating classes, and an improved knowledge of their legal rights and privileges, and this has, I hope, been accompanied by a strict administration of the law. Then there has been a greater readiness on the part of landlords to recognise and affirm the rights of cultivators, and I hope that this may, to some extent, be due to the influence of your association."

Surely, in the face of this strong and authoritative testimony, it cannot justly be contended that the agricultural prosperity in Bengal and Behar is impeded or hampered by the existing land-laws.

12. That the proposed Bill is ill-suited to the purposes for which it is intended is evident from the fact that the Bill is not made applicable to the State in regard to property which it holds in the capacity of a landlord. The State has a separate and summary law for the settlement and recovery of rent on its own estates. Even when it manages in trust the private estates of minors or wards under its care, it is not subject to the ordinary procedure for the realisation of rent. If an inquiry be made it will be found that the tenants of the State landlord are by no means better off in life than those of the private landlord; perhaps in many instances worse off. It is but reasonable that, ceteris paribus, the same land-law ought to apply equally to the State landlord and the private landlord, for surely what is done by the State ought to be regarded as the best example for the private landlord.

That in conclusion, your Petitioners pray that your Honourable House will be pleased to take the above statements, facts, and reasons into consideration, and to adopt such steps as to your Honourable House may seem meet to prevent the passing of the Bill under notice.

And Your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ENGLISHMAN."

SIR,—The death-blow aimed at the landed proprietary of Bengal and Behar by the present policy of the Government of India, will mark the Vicereignty of Lord Ripon as legislatively the most revolutionary period in the history of this country. During the ninety years that have passed away since Lord Cornwallis concluded that great settlement which has maddened with rage the present Red Radicals of the Indian Legislature, there has not been a single measure which has so violently agitated the aristocracy and the middle classes of the Lower Provinces. At the meetings held in every district, men flock in breathless anxiety to listen to the principles of the proposed law, and, with down-cast eyes, contemplate the sad ruin that awaits them. Few and short are the words they utter, but their measured sentences well out from a full heart, and speak more eloquently of the alarm and indignation that surge on within them than ours of rapid rhetoric. The thought of the wrong they are about to suffer is embittered by the reflection that they have done nothing to deserve their doom. Landholders, as a body, are the most loyal of Her Majesty's Indian subjects. No class of the population has more closely identified itself with the British rule. With that rule their hopes, their aspirations, their very existence, are linked in chains of triple steel. Almost in every district you find men whose loyalty has been sorely tried; for instance, in the meeting at Soory in Beerbhoom there arose to address the assembly a Mahomedan gentleman, with the weight of seventy winters on his hoary locks, who, when villages were smoking in ruin during the Sonthal Raid of 1854, stemmed the tide of revolt, and did services of which the title of Khan Bahadur, conferred upon him by the Government of Lord Canning, still stands as a conclusive proof. "Of what avail," he bitterly asked, "is the honour which has been done me, if Government is going to reduce me and mine to poverty and ruin?" The feelings of the old gentleman are a type of the general feeling of the country. I beg to ask the responsible advisers of his Excellency whether it is consistent with justice and good policy so entirely to estrange the sympathy of the most influential section of the community. The placid assurance of his Honour, the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal to the landholders of Bhaugulpur that their misapprehensions about the Bill are unfounded, is not worth the wind which conveyed it to his audience, for in the same breath, his Honour assured them that it is the intension of the Government to restore the tenants to the position they are supposed to have occupied, or which they should have occupied, at the time of the Permanent Settlement. Could the fiercest sans-culotte have uttered words more destructive to the peace and good order of society? It ought to have struck his Honour that his utterances implied a reconstruction of the agricultural community of India, and he might have just as well told us that, as land was held in common in pre-historic times, Government was going to introduce the good old rule. Sir, it is the fate of India to be subjected to experiments at the hands of political quacks in various departments of her government. But, I believe the greatest misfortune she has to suffer is the experiments in social vivisection which Western Socialists, dressed in authority, perform on her from time to time. Look at the history of this present land legislation. The landlords wanted a law to recover their rents more quickly, and now they have got a bill which proposes to construct the status of tenants on a new platform, in order that it may be seen how a certain pet theory will work in the East. It is admitted that the Bill introduces alterations which are yet unattempted in the previous history of Indian legislation; and the reasons assigned by Mr. Ilbert for a change of such mighty importance, are, first, that the tenant had certain rights in 1790, which ought to be unearthed and now returned with life and light. Secondly, that agrarian disputes demand the restoration of these rights. Thirdly, that the tenants are sunk in destitution and poverty, and unable to cope with famines and scarcities, and that if they are invested with new rights, their material prosperity will be ensured. Let us examine these grounds step by step. What is the foundation of the assumption that the tenants had rights of property in land? The Hon. Mr. Ilbert, in his speech introducing the Bill, says: "But there were three things which the Government did not do by the Permanent Settlement. It did not divest itself of its general rights—a right which belonged to it not as landlord, but as Government—to make from time to time such laws and adopt such administrative measures as it might think expedient for the general welfare of all classes of its subjects. It did not define the nature and extent of the proprietary right which it gave up to the zemindars, and did not include in its grant any proprietary or quasi proprietary rights belonging, not to itself, but to some other class of persons. Before the settlement, the zemindars, when not cultivating themselves, occupied a middle position between the Government, with substantial but ill-defined proprietary rights over them, and the great mass of cultivators, with substantial but ill-defined proprietary rights under them. After the settlement they were freed from the one but remained subject to the other." So that, according to the honourable member, the great mass of cultivators in Bengal and Behar had substantial, but ill-defined, proprietary rights in land. Now, in the Minute of Sir John Shore, quoted in the 3rd Vol. of "Harrington's Analyses," there occurs the following passage:—"It is, however, generally understood that the ryots, by long occupancy, acquire a right of possession in the soil, and are not subject to be removed; but this right does not authorise them to sell or mortgage it, and it is so far distinct from a right of property. This, like all other rights under a despotic or varying form of government, is precarious. The zemindars, when an increase has been forced upon them, have exercised the right of demanding it from their ryots. If we admit the property of the soil to be solely vested in the zemindars, we must exclude any acknowledgment of such right in favour of the ryots, except when they may acquire it from the proprietor." Again, "with respect to the ryots," says Sir John Shore, "their rights appear very uncertain and indefinite." There can be no doubt, therefore, that if we accept the authority of Sir John Shore, who was the trusted colleague of Lord Cornwallis, and intimately acquainted with the status and rights of the agricultural classes, as they existed in 1793, the tenants had not proprietary rights in the soil; and, beyond freedom from ejectment in cases of long possession, were not clothed with any of the incidents of ownership in land. At any rate, their rights were nowhere defined, never discovered, but as Sir John Shore remarks "very uncertain and indefinite." In the face of these facts, we are coolly told that the cultivators had substantial proprietary rights in the land, without a single iota of proof being adduced in support of such a bold assertion; and when, in addition to this, it is remembered that the so-called tenant right has never received legislative recognition in its present shape for nearly a century, during which millions of money have been invested in land on the plighted faith of the Government, the injustice and breach of faith involved in the work of destruction of the landed rights of the zemindars comes out in bold relief. I fear, Sir, I have trespassed too much upon your space to-day, and must stop here. I may revert to the subject on another occasion.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Sept. 18; Madras and Allahabad, Sept. 20; Calcutta, Sept. 20.

THE Times of India states that "considerable excitement" has been caused by Reuter's second famous "error in transmission," in regard to the telegraphing home "26" instead of "205" as the number of local reports hostile to the Ilbert Bill. The Times of India says that "Reuter's Agent, however, now denies that there is any similarity between the two mistakes, and takes all the blame on his own shoulders. The number "26" was, he says, a telegraphic error for "206," the cypher having dropped out during transmission. But he does not explain how the total of 140 was obtained, when, according to his own showing, the total should have been 320 instead of 140; nor does he explain how he made the opinions in favour of the Bill amount to 114, which is in itself another startling mistake. He has been challenged to publish the original message as it left India. This challenge he has not accepted.

MANY meetings had been held during the week in Bengal, at which it was resolved to continue the opposition to the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Bill, and several others in opposition to the proposed Bengal Tenancy Bill.

As in the week before last, so this week, Anglo-Indians in England are missing their accustomed Monday's budget of telegraphic news from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times. The cause is, we presume, the gravity of the political position in China; which naturally forces the Times temporarily to devote the main portion of its Asiatic telegraphic service to the Far East.

In lieu of the usual Calcutta telegram, we find in this morning's Times a long official communiqué on the forthcoming report of the Education Commission. The source of the inspiration will be recognised immediately by everyone who is acquainted with the course of recent educational controversies in India; and we have no hesitation in plainly saying at once, that this communiqué, undoubtedly bearing the best possible authority on behalf of the Education Commission, will be received with painful surprise, and the gravest dissatisfaction, by all friends of the Higher Education of India.

AND this impression will be the more painful, because of the Jesuitical tone of the communiqué, and the crafty language that has been employed to lessen the effect of the blow that is now to be aimed direct at the heart of Indian High Education.

We are told that—

"It will be a relief to the friends of the higher education to find, as we believe they will, that there is no reason to apprehend any rash proposals in this department. The fears of the advocates of Government education will be allayed when they learn that there is no recommendation of withdrawal of Government control and support from any college that can establish its claim to existence on the ground of honest work or practical results at all commensurate with its cost; and that no college will be given up to local management, without ample guarantee for its permanent and efficient maintenance, unless it be one or two so little appreciated by the natives as to be felt as an intolerable burden to the State. Agra and Aligarh, which have already been so 'transferred,' are examples of this class. Though the principle of the despatch of 1854 will not only be re-affirmed but given effect to in these cases, there is no likely prospect of any interference with the Presidency Colleges."

If "the friends of the higher education" are all downright fools and idiots, it is possible that the information conveyed in the above paragraph may be "a relief" to them. We are further told that—

"The 'Council on Education in India' may not naturally complain that on this point their opponents have got matters too much their own way. They cannot, however, be surprised at the result, if they consider the composition of the Commission. Although one object of the inquiry was the abuses which had crept into the administration of the Education Department, no fewer than eight out of its twenty-one members were directly connected with that bureau, and many of the others were strictly departmental men. It is, however, reasonable to expect that the recommendations of the Commission will on this subject be regarded by Government as a minimum. It may readily be admitted that, on the whole, they have done their work well. No one questions the fair and thorough way in which they have collected evidence, and they who have so successfully advocated this energy must be gratified with the results in other departments of education. On the question of transferring colleges from Government control to local management, we have reason to believe that the missionary members were as decided as any secularist or Hindu, that in no case should Government colleges be handed over to a missionary body."

Now, when we remember that the self-styled "Council on Education" never, in their wildest moments of reliance on the fads of a propagandist Viceroy, dreamt of expecting that Government Colleges would be handed over to a Missionary body—when, further, we remember that neither the Council nor any other of the most sanguine enemies of High Education ever expected to be able to overthrow the powerful, necessary, and comparatively inexpensive Presidency Colleges—and when, lastly, we remember that the chief point at issue has been the very case of such Colleges as those of Agra and Aligarh, whose students private enterprise cannot possibly reach except through the Missionary agencies—it will be seen at once that the language here employed indicates, either a Jesuitical attempt to mislead, so transparent as to overreach itself, or else an impertinent contempt for the intelligence of those to whom it is addressed.

THE Education Commission's Report may well be read side by side with the recent letter to the Times of its President, Dr. Hunter, in defence of the Ilbert Bill. In the two documents Lord Ripon's real policy stands revealed; and we ask our Native friends seriously to consider whether this is the policy for which they are sacrificing so much in attacking their Anglo-Indian fellow-subjects. The policy may be summed up in a very few words. It amounts to this—"Give to the educated Natives any illusory privileges that will serve at once to flatter them and to tickle the fancy of the Birmingham Radicals; and, above all,—cut off the supply of educated Natives."

This policy was bluntly enunciated in Sir Frederick Roberts's opinion on the Ilbert Bill.

THE beauty of this policy lies not in its morality, but in its political expediency all round. For it secures to the Government of India, in its forthcoming attack on the landed interest (and especially on the obnoxious Permanent Settlement), the support not only of the Radical party at home, but also of that section of the educated Natives themselves, who are not wise enough or experienced enough to see that they are helping to cut their own throats.

AND it seems highly probable that the Local Self-Government schemes, among their other tendencies in the way of increased taxation, will mightily aid the Government of India in its desire to break down the Permanent Settlement. Under those schemes, it is, of course, clear that local government will pass largely into the hands of a class different from, and often hostile to, the Zemindars. For proof of this, it is only necessary to read the accounts of the squabbles in the Uttarparah Municipality. Hence, the first use the new Local Boards will make of their powers will be to help to overthrow the influence of the local aristocracy. Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. O'Kinealy, and Mr. Ilbert will, doubtless, say "And a good thing too!"—but we trust they will not find many experienced Indian officials to agree with them.

The Civil and Military Gazette says:—

"According to the Hindoo Patriot, the proprietors of certain Calcutta bazaars are levying from their tenants, the shopkeepers, a 'small cess' in aid of the National Fund. The idea is an ingenious one; but, as the Patriot points out, distinctly illegal. So far, some Rs.4,000 only has been contributed to the Fund; and six lacs are required for the purposes of National regeneration."

The Hindoo Patriot says that Colonel Osborn, in his last letter to the Statesman, referring to Mr. Lalmohun Ghose's speech at the Ilbert Bill meeting, at Willis's Rooms, says:—"No one who heard him could fail to be struck by the absurdity of the assertion that the natives of India have not the abilities requisite for discharging the duties of important offices of public trust."

Of Sir George Campbell's speech the same writer says:—"Sir George, unhappily for himself, tries to amalgamate in his own person the two characters of covenanted civilian and advanced Radical. The one would constrain him to assume the character of an anti-Ilbertite; the latter forces him to appear on the public platform and profess approval of that which in his heart he dislikes. And the result was that Sir George's speech left his auditors doubtful whether he spoke in support of Lord Ripon's policy, or in defence of the Covenanted Civilians against the implied attack upon them in the fact of a meeting being held at all."

Of Mr. Chichele Plowden the above writer remarks:—"Mr. Plowden's speech was quite a curiosity in the way of oratory. It was as if the man had written out an official letter on half-margin, and then learned it by heart."

COLONEL OSBORN, Sir George Campbell, and Mr. Plowden are all, we observe, members of the new Ilbertite "Reform" Committee—evidently a "Happy Family."

The Petition of the Central Committee of Landholders of Bengal and Behar against the Bengal Tenancy Bill was signed by the undermentioned members of the Central Committee of Landholders:—

Maharaja of Burdwan, Maharaja of Durbhanga, Maharaja of Hatwa, Maharaja of Dumraon, Maharaja Sir Jotindra Mohun Tagore, Nawab Abdool Gunni and Nawab Ahsen Oolla of Dacca, Maharaja Komul Krishna, Maharaja Narendra Krishna, and Raja Harendra Krishna of Sobhabazar, Calcutta, Raja Poorna Chunder Sing, Paikparah, Raja Suttayanund Ghosal, Bhoochoyas, Raja Promotionath Roy, Dighaputty, Raja Surjyakunt Acharya Chowdhary, Mymensing, Raja Hurbullub Narain Sing, Sunbursa (Bhangulpore), Raja Shyma Sunker Roy Chowdhary and Nawab Mir Mohamed Ali of Furreedpore, Baboos Joykissen Mukerjee, Peary Mohun Mukerjee and Bejoykissen Mukerjee, of Utterpara (Hooghly), Babu Saruden-dranath Tagore, the Honourable Durga Churn Law, Babu Gobin Lal Seal and Kali Prosonna Ghosa of Calcutta, Babu Lolitmohun Sing Roy of Burdwan, Babu Kissory Mohun Gossain of Serampore, Rai Bahadur, Rajendralal Mitra, LL.D., C.I.E., Honourable Harbans Sahai Arrah, Honourable Mohamed Yasuf Behar, Babus Mohiny Mohun Roy, Rajshaye, Nali gram Sing Sahabad, Mohesh Chunder Chowdry and Joggendra Chunder Ghose, 24-Pergunnahs, Janaky Nath Roy, Gobind Chunder Dutt, Fransunkur Roy Chowdhary, Purbati Sunker Roy Chowdry, Girijasunkur Mozoomdar, Kulada Kinkur Roy, and Sita Nath Roy, of East Bengal, Mr. J. J. J. Keswick, of the firms of Jardine, Skinner, and Co., and Watson and Co., Mr. M. B. Morrison and Mr. C. J. Qadros, zemindars of Bhagulpore, Mr. P. F. Cauty, zemindar of Purnea, and Kristodas Pal, Secretary.

The Pioneer Mail of September 2, in a paragraph evidently inspired, makes a serious charge against the Under Secretary of State for India. It says:—

"We have reason to think that Mr. Cross's disingenuous statement of the Opinions on the Ilbert Bill, lately laid before the House of Commons, is not justified by the version supplied from this country."

EVERYONE knows that Colonel Bradford has for years past borne the character of being one of the best and stanchest friends of the natives among Anglo-Indian officers. Yet this is how he is dismissed by the Indian Mirror:—

"Colonel Bradford, Chief Commissioner of Ajmere, and agent of the Governor-General in Rajputana, has given an opinion strongly in favour of withdrawal of the Ilbert Bill. The political officers in India are the greatest bureaucrats. So we are not surprised to hear of Colonel Bradford's opinion."

The Civil and Military Gazette says:—

"In the present state of things, it will certainly be regarded as a significant circumstance that the trade between India and Central Asia, by way of Cabul and Peshawur, should have decreased last year by nearly five-and-twenty lacs. Of this diminution ten lacs occur under the head of tea, thirteen under that of Indian and European piece-goods, and the remainder in indigo. There is little room for doubt as to the cause of the falling off. The Punjab Trade Report, from which the figures are taken, admits that it is attributed to the effects of the Russian policy in Central Asia; and, in fact, there has been no more marked feature in that policy than its invariable hostility to English and Indian trade wherever it has been encountered from Khiva to Kashgar. And now that Russia has completely secured the highway along which all the traffic, coming from Afghanistan and India, must pass, in order to penetrate into Central Asia, it is not surprising that Indian trade should rapidly feel the effects."

The Englishman gives the following account of the Calcutta Freight Market for the week ending Sept. 15:—

"The past week has been one of almost total inactivity in our freight market. Inquiry for tonnage has slackened, and rates may be quoted considerably easier, both by Canal and Cape. To add to the depression, several unfixed steamers have arrived, and others are likely to follow, as for the time being there does not seem to be any employment for them elsewhere. The reports from the home markets still continue very discouraging. Four ships found employment during the week, two for London, one for Liverpool, and one for New York. Our unfixed tonnage stands at 43,187."

We take the following account of the Tea Market and prospects from Messrs. Balmer, Lawrie, and Co.'s Indian Tea and Weather Report:—

"Our last report was dated 1st instant, the weather during the past fortnight has been rather more favourable, but from nearly all tea districts we have reports stating that already there are signs of the cold weather coming on; in this case the out-turn will be most seriously affected, but it is to be hoped that the present appearances are only temporary and that planters may be cheered by a good October."

The Times of India publishes the following obituary of the week ending Sept. 18:—Mr. H. W. Barker, chief clerk to the Presidency Magistrates' Courts, and clerk to H.M.'s Justices of the Peace, Bombay; Captain Arthur Langham, adjutant, East Indian Railway Volunteers; Lieutenant-Colonel Frederick Donnelly Harington, Bengal Staff Corps; Staff Surgeon Charles L. Ridout, H.M. Tourmaline; Mr. P. Langlois, barrister-at-law, Rangoon.

Nothing seems to have been decided yet as to what Bombay officers are to attend the Bangalore camp of exercise, though in Bengal a number of names have been given of those selected. If it be true, as stated, that only a limited number of commanding officers, and commanding officers only, will represent the regimental element of the service, we think it is a mistake. It does not follow that the commandant of a battalion is, in virtue of his position, the officer best qualified to benefit by the lessons to be learnt at a great camp. In most corps there are one or two officers who make a study of their profession, and who have a special aptitude for drill and tactics. It is from among these that the choice should be made, and their reports of the manœuvres would be a good test of their ability. Or if it is necessary to select commandants for the Bangalore camp, they should be allowed to take their adjutants with them, so that these young officers might enjoy and improve the opportunity of witnessing field operations on a large scale.

The dates on which the various regiments and corps are to move this year is still uncertain in most instances. We believe that the delay in settling details is owing to the desire of the authorities to have as many troops as possible passing through Poona at the same time, so that they may take part in the manœuvres which are to be held near Poona during the coming cold weather.

SELECTED ARTICLES.

PROPOSED INDIAN REFORM ASSOCIATION.

SIR,—The agitation of the Anglo-Indians who are opposed to the policy of the Marquis of Ripon's Government led to the formation of the British India Committee, to support the wise and progressive measures introduced by the present Indian Government, and especially the Criminal Jurisdiction Bill of Mr. Ilbert. It is now proposed to establish it as a permanent society, to be called "The Indian Reform Association," in order to co-operate with the people of India in promoting their political progress and material interests, and to inform the British public regarding the condition of India.

It is increasingly necessary for the interest both of India and Great Britain that the public opinion of this country should exercise its influence in the decision of the vital questions affecting the welfare of the two hundred and fifty millions of our fellow-subjects in India.

In every division of our Indian Empire there is a growing number of intelligent, educated men, who have studied the history of English political progress, and have been encouraged to hope for an increasing share in the administration of their own country. They have received ideas of freedom, patriotism, self-reliance, and self-government; it would be contrary to all experience to expect men, under such circumstances, to permanently remain in a position of social and political inferiority. The growth of public opinion in India, its free press, the development of public instruction from the elementary school to the university, the railways, telegraphs, municipal institutions, and the general progress of enlightenment have brought about a new political condition in that land—a political condition demanding wisdom and judgment on the part of those responsible for its administration.

The condition of affairs no longer admits of the policy hitherto largely pursued of leaving the ultimate decisions of great principles connected with the administration of India to small official bodies in that country or in England. If history proves anything, it proves that the welfare of the many can never in the long run be safely left to the arbitrament of the few, more especially when the latter represent a class or a race alien from the former. A paternal despotism, however wise and benevolent, will fail to secure the happiness and contentment of the people, if persisted in after they have grown out of the state of political pupillage towards manhood. After that stage autocratic rule generally ends in political convulsions and disasters.

With these considerations in view, we believe that an enlightened and organised English public opinion should be created as a national tribunal for considering the great questions which will inevitably come before it in the future. To such a court the people of India may come with confidence. They well know that in the English people at large they will find the sympathy and goodwill which they cannot always expect on the part of those who, in India, are their rivals and competitors.

The present agitation in India and in this country regarding Mr. Ilbert's Bill has shown the people of India that they are face to face with a powerful party, having apparently in many points interests opposed to their own. The representatives of the ruling race with their traditions of superior rights and privileges, are not prepared to concede the claims made by the native races. It is not to be expected that either a governing class, or rivals in trade and commerce, can always judge impartially in reference to demands made by Indians of proved capacity and good social position, demands which are the necessary result of our past legislation and administration.

To give the people of India such a court of popular appeal as has just been indicated will strengthen the bonds of amity and goodwill in a manner such as no absolute Government, however wise and generous, can hope to do. Only in the growth of feelings of common interests, of mutual regard and esteem between the two peoples, can there be found any lasting security for union between the countries, and peace and progress in India.

The chief object of the Indian Reform Association will be to qualify the British public to discharge this great function. It will endeavour to do so by bringing before the public all facts relating to the condition and desires of the people of India, so far as they can be ascertained from the best sources. Accurate information will be collected and diffused in such a form as shall be intelligible to persons not acquainted with the technicalities of Indian life and administration. This will be done through the press, public meetings, conferences, and other means calculated to influence Parliament and the Executive, &c. When duly instructed, the public will be enabled to test the fitness of candidates for Parliament as representatives of India as well as of Great Britain, and to induce their representatives to qualify for such representation, and to take such a course in Parliament as shall secure adequate attention to the welfare of the Indian people.

We shall be glad to learn if such an association will secure your sympathy and support.

On behalf of the Provisional Executive,

G. B. CLARK, M.D., Chairman.

GEORGE FOGGO, } Hon. Secretaries.

S. R. GEDDES, }

A. K. SETTNA, Corresponding Secretary for India.

BRITISH INDIA COMMITTEE.

The British India Committee has been formed for the purpose of supporting the wise and progressive measures to which the Marquis of Ripon's Government is giving effect, and generally with the object of promoting the interests of the people of India.

MR. BRANSON ON THE ILBERT BILL.

At the great Conservative Demonstration at Birmingham, one of the meetings was presided over by Sir Richard Temple; and in seconding the first resolution, Mr. J. H. A. Branson, barrister-at-law, of Calcutta, spoke as follows:—

Sir B. Temple, Ladies, and Gentlemen,—I must first ask leave to thank the leaders of this association as well for myself as in the names of our absent country men and women in India for this opportunity of laying before a British public the wrong which has stirred so deeply the whole European community in India, and put them in a position never occupied before by the Europeans in India, a position of direct hostility to the Government. I allude to the latest outcome of the sentimental legislation now in such favour with the Government, the latest manifestation of the "Perish India" policy—the Bill known as the Ilbert Bill—the object and result of which is to rob Englishmen in India of a highly-prized right—to declare that they shall no longer retain their ancient right of being tried by their own countrymen, by their co-religionists, by men who understand them, their ways, their manners, their habits, by men who would be likely, in the face of false evidence, to form a right conclusion as to whether an accused Englishman did or did not do a particular act; but shall be liable to be tried in questions of their lives and liberties by men who do not understand them, who do not know their ways of life, their manners, their modes of thought, their habits, or even their language, aliens in race, in thought, in religion. As I have said, it has up to now been the law in India that an English born man and his descendants, to certain degrees, shall, if charged with a criminal offence, be tried by one of themselves. This was the ancient right of the Englishman, and it has been confirmed to him by frequent statutes, and has been looked upon by the English people in India as, to a great extent, the charter of their liberties. This was the state of the law when the present Government came into office, and when Lord Ripon took up the reins of the government of India. While on the one hand this was a right which the English in India greatly prized, by which they put the greatest store, it was not a right which inflicted any wrong upon anybody. It inflicted no wrong upon the various races of India. It did absolute good by keeping up the prestige of the English people and it undoubtedly tended to discourage false charges against Europeans. Upon the strength of this security, and safe in the possession of this right, Europeans have spread themselves slowly over the country, and the deadly swamps of Assam, of Cachar, of Bengal, the barren hill-sides of Coorg, the jungles of the Himalayan Terai, have been turned into smiling gardens, thousands of acres of tea, coffee, and cinchona, hundreds of factories and mills, thousands of miles of railways, speak to the vivifying influence of English energy, English endurance, and English capital. Now, to keep these vast enterprises up, European supervision is absolutely necessary. The European in India is invariably a supervisor. His services are too valuable for him to be the labourer, save in exceptional cases. The European, then, as supervisor, is the exactor of labour. The exactor of labour always is, always must be, unpopular with at least the black sheep of his flock. Here in England he has his dangers, but they are not the dangers that he has to face in India. In India, and particularly in Bengal, the weapon of the native is a false charge. This is a fact—a fact that none, even among themselves, will attempt to deny. If one man has a grudge against another, it finds its expression in a false charge of a criminal offence. To take advantage of a death in a family or a village, to mutilate the corpse, and make it the foundation of a charge of murder against an adversary is an occurrence far from uncommon. I do not think I should exaggerate if I said it was a frequent occurrence. The European supervisor, then, if he gives offence to those under him by his care of his employer's interests, may find himself any day the subject of such a false charge. Hitherto he has had this safeguard. The false case, got up by a native, was pretty sure to go wrong in some of its details, some incident was sure to be introduced by the native schemer which would be so utterly un-English as to arouse the suspicion of the English judge or magistrate trying the case, who would put his finger upon the blot and say: "This an Englishman was not likely to do. This a native would have done perhaps, and so the native getter-up of the case has introduced it," and thus the judge's knowledge of the nature of the accused has helped him to arrive at a right judgment. But how would this be with a native judge? The native accuser would have got up the case as would appear probable to him, and what would be probable to him would also commend itself, in all probability, as probable to the native judge. He would not be in a position to judge of what a European would be likely to do under any given circumstances, and so this great safeguard of the Englishman would be missing. I am, mind you, treating the case as if there was no question of the entire honesty and thorough conscientiousness of the native judge. But, speaking from a very large experience of native officials, I do not feel that this is the right way of regarding the matter. I do not desire to impeach the honesty of the intentions of the native judge, but my experience is that there is no class of men, no race of men, more subject to the influence of position, caste, family, friendship, and enmity in their judicial proceedings than the Bengalees. I do not desire to disparage the natives of Bengal unduly. I have lived long and worked long amongst them. They have many good qualities, but conspicuous by their absence are truthfulness and the love of justice for its own sake. To this must be added the fact that, as a nation, the Bengalees does not love the Englishman. Personal friendships there is no doubt there are. I myself flatter myself that I have friends among them, but I cannot say that, as a rule, there is much affection between the two nations. There are qualities, characteristics in the English which the Bengalees cannot understand or appreciate. Under these circumstances, the English think, and I am sure they think rightly, that their lives and liberties are safer in the hands of judges chosen out of their own countrymen than in the hands of a native judge. But it is not only Englishmen that are to be subjected thus in criminal matters, to aliens in race and creed, to men who cannot know or understand or judge them, to men who cannot put themselves in their places, so as to be able to say, "is he likely to have done this deed;" but Englishwomen also, our wives, our sisters, our daughters, your sisters, Englishmen, it is proposed to place in this position. A judge who is bred in the belief that a woman who can walk abroad, who can dare to look her husband's, her father's, her brother's friend in the face, and speak with him, is the vilest of God's creatures—deserves no respect, is unworthy of any consideration—such a judge to sit in judgment upon an Englishwoman, a being of whose nature, of whose manners, of whose habits, he has not the smallest knowledge. This is the object and effect of this proposed change in the law. It is admitted now that there is no reason for it save to gratify a whim of Lord Ripon, who thinks that in this he is carrying out Radical ideas. I have not the time now to give you the full history of the origin of this Bill. But this I will say—it was begotten of fraud upon ignorance and has been nurtured in dishonesty and sullen, unreasoning obstinacy. A Native Member of Council asked that the anomaly by which an Englishman in prison could sue out a writ of habeas corpus and a native could not, might be abolished; and, as the Government did not dare to sweep that anomaly away a diversion was created by a proposal to sweep away the Englishman's ancient right of trial by his own countrymen instead. Lord Ripon has in thus acting raised a question which, unless he speedily solves it, must give trouble in the future. As the Commander in Chief of Bombay asks, are we prepared to let native officers sit on court-martials to try English officers and English soldiers? Dare we do such a thing? And if we will not allow the manly, the warlike races of India to claim to be our equals, do we think they will quietly submit to our granting this boon to the weakest the most timid men in India, because these men can rave in the press, and speak of a "Heaven-sent Viceroy?" Are you going to support a Government that thus degrades your race, and thus puts you, and what is more, your women in peril? (We will not! Shame! Shame!) I feel that you will not. Then, I say to you, whoever you may be, Conservatives or Radicals, rise in your full strength. Say to this Government that this must not be—that Englishmen who have gone abroad to carry the blessings of English energy into foreign parts, to open up a career for England's teeming population shall not with your consent be trodden upon and wronged—(cheers)—that the glory of England and her vast possessions must not be cast to the winds for an idea. That England wants India to give her people room to grow, to give her energies room to develop themselves, and that if it is sought to rob you of this in the name of Liberalism you will not have such Liberalism, but will root up a Government so untrue to England and to her people. (Cheers.) Say that the possessions of England must be conserved, must be preserved, and that rulers who will conserve England's greatness are the only rulers you will have. Such rulers, such a Government you had under the late Lord Beaconsfield—(loud cheers)—such a Government may you have again, under the excellent leadership of Lord Salisbury and Sir Stafford Northcote—(loud cheers) when, having learned, as I think you have now learnt from the past, you perceive that by Conservatism alone can this nation, not yet, thank God, in its decay, but still in its full vigour, grow to its full national strength. I thank you for the patient attention and the appreciative hearing you have given me. I have, I fear, trespassed already too long upon your time. (No, no, go on, go on.) I thank you much. I will not keep you long, but I will just mention to you one important point that I had forgotten. I see by the Indian papers that since I left India the large body of working Europeans employed on the various railways throughout India have appointed a delegate to go to you, their brothers in England—to the working men of England. Judging that you will not desert them in their loneliness and trouble, but will help them with your great strength, he will come to you, and he, as one of yourselves, will be able to tell you whether I have spoken too strongly. I fear I have not been able to say enough to you to-night, long as I have been, to make the matter as clear to you as I could wish, but if what I have said shall put you upon enquiry—shall lead you to look up some Indian friend, who can tell you whether what I have said is true or not, shall lead you to see that the wisdom of the course being taken by the Government is not clear, but that the matter should be looked into, I shall have done all that I need do, for if you inquire at all into the matter I have no doubt what your verdict upon the action of the Government in this matter will be. (Loud and prolonged cheers.)

RAILWAY SERVANTS AND THE ILBERT BILL.

On Friday the Conference of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants of England, Scotland, and Wales was resumed in the Newcastle Hall, Edinburgh, Mr. Bell presiding.

The Secretary reported that a requisition, asking that a branch of the society should be established at Bombay, had been received from three railway servants in India. They stated that railway men had no protection whatever in India, and were liable to be fined 500 rupees or be imprisoned for three years for alleged neglect of duty. The executive had considered the application and replied, asking for more numerous signed requisition. It was agreed meanwhile to take no action in the matter.

Mr. Atkins, General Secretary of the Indian Railway Servants' Society, then delivered an address on the Ilbert Bill. He said he had to thank them very much for affording him an opportunity of delivering the message he had brought from India. He only arrived from India last Monday night, and observed from a newspaper put into his hands that their Congress was just about to be held in Edinburgh. On applying to the secretary of their society, he at once obtained permission to address them on the subject which was one of very great importance to their brother workmen and their wives in the Eastern Empire. The message he had to deliver was a request that they would aid them in maintaining those rights and privileges which were so dear to every Englishman and Englishwoman, that they would help to continue that flow of capital to the Eastern Empire which was so necessary for its development, and to maintain that condition of things that would make life in India bearable and also emigration to it possible. They knew as well as he did how the population of these British Islands was increasing year by year, and how desirable it was that there should be outlets for the surplus population. They knew as well as he did that it was the cream of this population that emigrated to their colonies. Where would that grand country America be, and these glorious colonies of Australia, or rather what would they have been, had it not been for the cream of the industrious population that had gone there? (Cheers.) So in the same degree was the cream of the industrial population gradually drifting away to India, and he would venture to say that 95 per cent. of the Englishmen and Englishwomen who went to India made India their home. It was the land of their adoption, and they were as earnestly desirous to promote its welfare as the natives of the country. In India they had no parties. Liberals and Conservatives there united together for one common purpose, and that was to promote the welfare of the land of their adoption. (Cheers.) The Ilbert Bill was one which would make life in India unbearable for them, and emigration to India dangerous to those from this country. In the discussion which had just closed he heard them speak a little about politics. They did not like that, and they were perfectly right. (Cheers.) It was wise and proper that politics should be avoided as far as possible by organised associations. He had not come to appeal to Liberals or Conservatives, but to the Christian working men of Great Britain. As a Liberal—although there was very little use for such a term in India—he admired those eminent statesmen at present at the head of affairs, but he felt sure it was because they were misguided, and had been misled, that they were anxious to push this matter forward, when it involved so many grave consequences in their Eastern Empire. It was because he felt the importance of those grave consequences that he appealed to that society for support, not as Liberals or Conservatives, but as working men. The measure would, as they were aware, have the effect of allowing natives to exercise criminal jurisdiction over Englishmen and Englishwomen. He wished them at the outset to understand clearly that he was not in any way opposed to the natives. He believed in that doctrine of that grand old volume which had been handed down them to for ages—that grand old volume that would bear every investigation, and the doctrine he referred to proclaimed the brotherhood of men. In supporting that he believed he was supporting the natives of India as far as he possibly could. There were hundreds of Englishmen and Englishwomen whose hearts throbbed with British sympathy for the poor natives. He, from India, could tell them that the natives were oppressed and crushed down, and he could tell them more—that those educated natives who came from India to England did not represent the masses, they did not represent those teeming millions they talked of. Those teeming millions were without a single representative, except through the association he was connected with. That association was thrown open a number of years ago to natives. They welcomed the natives, and at the present time they had natives on their executive council. Their late general treasurer, who occupied that office for about eight and a-half years, was a native, and the very resolution that was passed by the executive council, and which permitted him to come to England, was seconded by a native. With these facts before them, he thought they would honestly admit that he was not opposed to the natives. A large number of the officials connected with our Indian Empire remained in India but a few years, and not many of them came into such immediate contact with the natives as he himself had done. He had travelled from the eastern to the western limits of the Indian Empire, and from the extreme north to the extreme south. The desire of the natives was that the welfare of their country should be promoted in a legitimate manner, and they felt that they had interests in common with those who, like himself, had made India the land of their adoption. He then gave some details as to the Hindoo religion, and the immorality by which it was characterised, and asked was it right or consistent that English Christian men and women should be subjected to the criminal jurisdiction of idolaters? It had been said that there was a large number of natives in favour of the Bill. He maintained positively that that was an untruth. A large proportion of the natives of India knew nothing about the Bill. Only 10 per cent. of the population read and wrote, and only 203,000 could speak English. How, then, could they understand the merits or demerits of the question? If a census were taken of the opinion of the natives throughout India, he was certain that 90 per cent. would clamour for the withdrawal of the Bill. It might seem strange that the natives should clamour for the withdrawal of a Bill that would give their countrymen a greater degree of power than they previously possessed. But it was for that very reason that they would ask its withdrawal, because they disliked their countrymen to possess so much power, and it was quite a common occurrence for natives who had cases in court to get them transferred from a native official to a European official. They knew they would get that justice which was denied them by their own countrymen. He then read a number of extracts from native and English newspapers, and also the opinions of several influential men, in opposition to the Bill. There was one thing, he said, to which he would like very much to draw attention, and that was the impossibility almost of Europeans who resided in the stations obtaining justice under the Bill, and also their liability to be subjected to trumped-up cases. False witnesses could be purchased in India for about 6d. or 1s. It was not very difficult to understand how very dangerous it would be to place the Europeans in India under the jurisdiction of natives, particularly where they were far removed from any Presidency town. The stations on their railways were in some parts a distance of 400 or 500 miles from any Presidency town, and he could mention a large number that were at least 300 miles from any place where legal assistance was procurable. Let them imagine a trumped-up case brought against a European, supported by false evidence, and the person against whom it was brought unable to obtain legal assistance. Barristers in India charged very high fees indeed. No barrister would go such a distance unless he were paid Rs.600 or Rs.700, besides what were called "refreshers." He would require perhaps £70 or £100 before he would undertake such a case, and they knew it was not in the power of working men to give such sums to clear themselves when false evidence was cited against them. If the Ilbert Bill were passed the position of the Europeans would be extremely dangerous. He might call attention to the condition of things that obtained among the very class upon whom the Government of India proposed to confer the power referred to. He quoted from the Times of India an account of the proceedings at an institution called the Poonah Sabhajanick, established by some of the most intelligent and best educated natives. He then read a letter from the Rev. Mr. Bate, a Baptist missionary, resident for many years in India. That gentleman said that "in the interests of the natives, no less than of Europeans, I think that the Ilbert Bill is sincerely to be deprecated. I cannot help thinking that if such men as Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Bright were only better acquainted with the facts they would think very much as we would think."

The delegate from Wolverhampton (No. 2), interrupting Mr. Atkins, said he understood that the intention of the Bill was to improve the position of the natives. He did not see why duly qualified natives should not be admitted to positions of power. We in this country would not like any one to come from India and domineer over us.

The delegate from Hartlepool said he understood that if the Bill passed it would be unsafe for Englishmen to stay in India.

Mr. Atkins said that if the natives of India were fit to exercise the jurisdiction, he believed there was not a single European in Indian who would deny it to them. He believed that at least 95 per cent. of the members of the Civil service would make great sacrifices in the interests of the native community. But they knew full well that the natives of India at the present time were not fit to receive the power.

The policy of the Indian Government at present was to relax all the examinations. They made the examinations so lax that the natives could pass with comparative ease. The Government at this time would appoint natives without any examination. Now, he thought they would admit that was quite improper, and they really must not judge of those natives by those who came to this country. There were some of those who came to this country and had been trained and passed examinations for the Civil Service, who, after going back to India, had to be degraded. It would be many years before the natives of India were so trained and fitted, both morally and socially, as to exercise those functions with which it was proposed to invest them. He then read a letter from the Rev. Mr. Watkin, railway chaplain, Allahabad, stating his strong opposition to the Bill. Mr. Atkins said he could only now appeal to the meeting in the name of their fellow-countrymen and their wives in India to assist them as far as possible in making the Bill a thing of the past. It would press heavily upon them, and they asked the aid and sympathy of their brethren here in opposition to it. They asked it not as Conservative or Liberal, but they asked it from them as Christian working men, as working men who had warm-hearted sympathies for those who were abroad in that great Eastern Empire.

The delegate from Battersea asked from whom Mr. Atkins had credentials. He understood that he had been sent by the railway servants to India.

Mr. Atkins said he had credentials from the railway servants and from people engaged in mills and otherwise.

The delegate from Battersea asked by whom Mr. Atkins was paid for coming to this country for the purpose he had in view.

Mr. Atkins said that a subscription was being raised among the working men of India to pay him. He, however, paid his own expenses.

The delegate from Battersea complained of some drawbacks under the present system of administering justice in India, and said he did not think that matters would be worse under the Ilbert Bill, but better.

Mr. Atkins said he admitted that there might be cases of miscarriage of justice under the present system. If there had not been so the society he represented would not have provided its members with funds to defend themselves.

The Chairman asked the delegates if they were prepared to commit themselves to a resolution on this subject. (A voice: "Yes.")

The delegate from Acorington said they were indebted to Mr. Atkins for telling them many things that they did not probably know before, but he had heard from other people statements of a different kind regarding the Hindoos and their religion. Then there were many religions in India, some of whose members would not even kill a fly. He would like to know if that was true?

Mr. Atkins said it was true. There was a sect of Hindoos in one part of India who had actually established an institution in which they placed a man every night so that the bugs should feed upon him. (Laughter.)

The delegate from Acorington said that if the Bill passed there would be only a very few judges appointed under it for the 250,000,000 inhabitants of India. He thought that they should do all they could to raise the natives of India in the social scale.

The delegate from Wellingborough then moved,—"That in the opinion of this meeting the policy of the Indian Government should be to freely open all official positions to every person, irrespective of race and creed, provided always that such person is duly qualified for the office."

The delegate from Staveley seconded the motion.

Mr. Atkins said he was afraid it was the idea of some of those present that those who had sent him there were opposed to the natives. On the contrary, as he had already told them, natives had been admitted into the association, and he thought they would agree with him that if they were to promote the welfare of a country they must begin among the working classes, and that was what those with whom he was connected were endeavouring to do. They were trying to bring the humbler classes together, and to make them something like the working people of this country.

The motion proposed by the delegate from Wellingborough was then put to the meeting and was carried unanimously.

THE "BATH JOURNAL" (LIBERAL) ON THE RESOLUTION OF THE BATH LIBERAL ASSOCIATION IN FAVOUR OF THE ILBERT BILL.

By far the most important portion of the address delivered at the Guildhall on Tuesday by Sir Charles Hobhouse was that relating to the Ilbert Bill. We all have a pretty fair knowledge of the vast extent of our Indian empire; of its stupendous mountains, its mighty rivers, its jungles and its forests; of its elephants, snakes, and tigers; while we are also apt to speak glibly of its two hundred and forty or fifty millions of native inhabitants as being our fellow-subjects without, in the slightest degree, realising the immensity of the population, its heterogeneous character, and the great skill with which it requires to be governed. Experimental legislation, which would be innocuous elsewhere, might prove altogether fatal in our great dependency; the wheels of State, like the car of Juggernaut, must there move straight on in one undeviating course, symbolical of the immense propelling force of European civilisation, but, unlike the passage of the heathen god, they must be set in motion only for the permanent good of the governed races, and not for their destruction. The measure which formed the staple of Sir Charles's address is advocated as being the outcome of the Queen's proclamation of a quarter of a century ago. Under one interpretation of the language then used this assertion may be correct; but while we gravely doubt whether, in the period immediately following the Mutiny, her Majesty's advisers really contemplated entrusting the liberty of British residents in India to native control, it were easy to show that another and more liberal reading of the words suggests different methods of promoting equality between native and foreigner than that provided by the Ilbert Bill. Sir Charles deprecated approaching subjects connected with the Government of India from a political standpoint, but at the same time he did not deny that his views concerning the measure in question "might not have been biased by reason of his general political opinions." Having thus ingenuously shown his hand, he proceeded to expound the views of a party adherent. The Queen's proclamation of 1858 was referred to, and because it was therein promised that "to whatever extent the natives showed themselves fitted by education, or capacity, or character, for taking part in the government of the country, that part they should take," they were now to be entrusted with a degree of arbitrary power from which there would, in many cases, be practically no appeal. Lord Ripon is Mr. Gladstone's nominee to the Viceregal office, and the Ilbert Bill is an outcome of the policy inaugurated by him. His Government seek to promote the passing of the measure partly because its abandonment might be construed as a change of front. So lame a reason is utterly unworthy the party by whom it is urged. The Viceroy is made for India, India is not made for the Viceroy, and persistence in any course in face of a widely-spread feeling of its danger bespeaks obstinacy, not judgment—timidity, not wisdom.

The population of India is, as has been said, very heterogeneous in its composition. The Parsee, the Brahmin, the Mahomedan, the Buddhist, with their many antipathies of caste, entirely shut out the hope of their ever becoming one people, in our sense of the word. Sir Charles would have us govern this incoherent mass of humanity through "their affections rather than through their fears." The idea is a noble one, and worthy of support; but to set up a few semi-Europeanised natives of one particular race as magistrates would offend instead of conciliate, and disgust instead of please. The affections of all may be won—slowly perhaps, but none the less surely on that account—by the strict impartiality of British-born magistrates. These, so far as they are informed, may be trusted to deal fairly with natives and whites alike; but who would say it were wise to expose European residents in outlying country districts to the prejudices of native magistrates surrounded by prejudiced native officials? It is British capital coupled with British power that has to a great extent made the India of to-day. Order has been brought out of chaos by a firm hand and with indomitable perseverance. But the hearts of the natives are not at one with ours, and if the strong man armed left the doors of his house open, he would soon be deprived of his power. It is urged that the establishment of a native magistracy in the provinces is on the one hand a small matter, and on the other, that it would do away with an anomaly that at present obtains. Opponents to the measure sagaciously ask if the concession is small why is it contended for thus pertinaciously? The direct effect upon 240 millions of people produced by the establishment of some ten or dozen native magistrates must be infinitesimal, but the consequent injury to the resident whites will be real and widespread. The sanctity of the oath is a phrase as unmeaning to the wily Hindoo as it is to Mr. Bradlaugh, but the copper skin surpasses his white brother in his willingness to offer any conceivable testimony for a few annas. Statisticians speak of Oriental lying as a fine art, and the manufactory of damning evidence against the white settlers would be immensely accelerated were natives seated on the tribunal of justice. It is pointed out that in outlying settlements the few whites would be entirely at the mercy of their servants; in the absence of the husband, the wife might be incontinently haled before the judicial bench on a trumped-up charge, and relegated to prison before an appeal to a supreme court could be heard. No kind of security against such outrages is provided by the Bill, and in the face of these and similar dangers the residents throughout the Peninsula are stirred as one man against it. This opposition is spoken of as factious and, as Sir Charles said, a struggle for "exclusive principles and privileges." In reply to the first of these charges, it should be stated that the Bill has been most elaborately discussed throughout the whole of Indian society since it was promulgated in February, with the result that not only in non-official circles, but among the executive also, the all-but unanimous opinion is against it. The small knot of favouring officials agree to it more for the sake of its abstract principle than for its direct object, and the acquiescence comes chiefly from those districts which would be least affected by its introduction. So far as "exclusive principles and privileges" are concerned, it should be remembered that British subjects residing in Turkey or Egypt are secured the right of trial by British-born judges and according to English law; also, that in those countries where such security for impartiality cannot be secured our residents and traders are protected by capitulations. Why, then, should our fellow-countrymen in India not be equally cared for? To our thinking that portion of the 76,000 English in India who are scattered throughout the length and breadth of the rural districts require and deserve some very palpable defence against native spite and craftiness. Their presence and capital civilise the "untutored breast" far more than would the sight of a native magistrate, and England has learned in many a bitter lesson the danger of reposing too great confidence in races only partially subdued. The Bill again is advocated as tending to abolish an anomaly at present existing in India. Native magistrates, it is asserted, work equitably and well in Calcutta; why, therefore, should they not be trusted to administer with impartiality in the provinces? The obvious reply is that the Calcutta Bench is assisted by white pleaders, and its judgments throughout the city are continually placed in juxtaposition. In isolated country places neither such assistance nor such comparison could be obtained. But another, and not less cogent answer may be found in the fact that since 1856 only three native magistrates have held office at Calcutta, and one of these was removed because he did not give satisfaction.

If we are going to legislate for the removal of anomalies, our task will be Quixotic in the extreme. By force of arms we have conquered Hindostan, and by our superior skill and energy Englishmen are feared and respected from one end of the Peninsula to the other. Our presence there is an anomaly nevertheless. Withdraw our capital from the interior and England would soon have nothing left but a few hazardingly held military stations. Withdraw instead our army, and private enterprise and capital would be driven out within six months. The Ilbert Bill does neither of these things, but it places the one in jeopardy, and thus throws increased responsibility upon the military. The fanciful anomaly it seeks to remove will be replaced by others far more injurious, and if the promoters of the measure are logical and push their ideas to a conclusion their tender care for the "affections" of the natives will not cease until not only native magistrates but native princes and native independence also are gratuitously established.

THE PROVINCIAL REPORTS ON THE ILBERT BILL.

[FROM THE "TIMES."]

It is not quite easy to convey to anyone who has not read the opinions furnished to the Government of India any adequate conception of the overwhelming strength of the testimony against the Ilbert Bill. Mere count of opinions nominally for and against shows, indeed, a sufficiently remarkable preponderance of hostile votes, but it gives no idea of the number, the cogency, and the practical character of the objections to the proposed change, nor does it bring out the entire failure of its advocates to meet them, or even, in most cases, to comprehend that anything more can be required than reference to some high-sounding general principle. The opinion of Bengal is of infinitely greater importance than that of any other province, because it alone contains a large resident European population living under conditions which make the character of the courts a matter of vital importance. In that province, whose opinion may be taken as final, not one single European official can be found either to approve the Bill or to suggest a compromise. Forty-five officers intimately acquainted with the social life and requirements of Bengal unreservedly condemn the measure in language and with illustrations of the most varied kind. One declares that in addition to being bad in principle and politically inexpedient, the Bill would prove unworkable in face of European opposition. Another points out that the Bill excludes from the magistracy whole classes of Europeans which now furnish excellent justices of the peace, and this under pretence of care for administrative convenience. Several point out the worthlessness of the argument of which so much has been made that native judges give satisfaction in Calcutta. We have more than once shown how entirely different are the conditions in presidency towns and in the Mofussil, but it is now pointed out in addition that native magistrates have escaped censure in Calcutta chiefly because the Europeans tried by them are poor and obscure, and the cases petty. Moreover, though it has been asserted by officials, who ought to have been better informed that for thirty years natives have been constantly and satisfactorily discharging magisterial duties, the truth is that only three natives have held office as magistrates of Calcutta since 1856, and for an aggregate of only seven out of twenty-seven years. Of the three, one was removed because he did not give satisfaction.

A native official, Baboo Hurry Mohun Chundra, thinks natives who have entered the service by way of competition are quite fit to try Europeans, but the statuory civilians, who seem at present to be the especial care of the Government, he declares to be "inferior men," "not fit for the Civil Service," and "having no recommendations whatever, except that they are related to some of the Rajahs." One official sarcastically observes that the word "anomaly" seems to prostrate certain intellects at once, but a very pretty array of anomalies is shown to attend the changes proposed in order to get rid of one. Mr. Wace wants to know whether the Indian Government is likely set a Bengali civilian to try Punjabis. Every one knows that the wildest doctrinaire at Simla would recoil from that experiment, but then why are English men and women to be tried by judges unfit to try a Punjabi. By a curious irony it is the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab who busies himself in attempting to prove that the exemptions enjoyed by natives are only privileges, while those enjoyed by Europeans are anomalies. In Bengal they do not fight about words, but they hold that an Englishwoman has at least as good a right as a native woman to object to appearing before a native judge, and that an Englishman has at least as good a right as a Sepoy to choose for himself whether he will be tried by an Englishman or a native. The Commissioner of the Burdwan division puts another anomaly so forcibly that we quote his words:—"While a young English gentleman of good birth, who has lived from his childhood in an atmosphere of the highest civilisation that the world has yet attained, has been educated at an English public school and University, and has gone through a period of special training besides, is first subjected to a severe competitive examination, then to two years' further training in England, followed by a second examination, before he is allowed even to enter the Civil Service, a young native gentleman who has had none of this training, who is often very imperfectly educated, and whose childhood has been subjected to the far from elevating influences of native society, is considered fit to be admitted to the Service at once, and without any preliminary test of his qualifications." We may add that though accustomed to regard polygamy, infanticide, and absolute contempt for women as portions of the natural order of society, he is to be put in a position where he will be required to understand the feelings of English wives and mothers. Moulvi Delawar Hosain Ahmed writes:—"It has become the fashion in these days to parade the cry of India for the Indians, but at present there are no people called Indians." To create an Indian people, he goes on to explain, the Government must maintain "the prestige due to the remembrance of Clive and Hastings. If the Bill should be passed, this prestige will be assuredly weakened before the proper time, and the grand idea of Radical statesmen—the idea of educating a race of Indians—must be indefinitely postponed."

We publish also the minute of the Chief Commissioner of Assam, which is the province most nearly affected after Bengal. It contains a summary of the opinions of the officials serving under him, which, it will be seen, are much more uncompromisingly hostile to the Bill than his own. Probably this is one of the cases referred to by Dr. Hunter, in which the head of a province has to keep one eye upon its requirements and the other upon the policy of the Government. Mr. Elliott, however, has not the smallest hesitation in voting for the unconditional abandonment of the measure, though he does not accept all the arguments of its opponents. Fifteen official opinions are recorded, all hostile to the Bill; and though in two cases it is admitted that in the abstract its principle is good, even in these its practical effect is condemned.

We give also the brief but pithy minute of the Governor of Madras, who does not see much harm in the Bill, but declines to admit that it was called for and recommends its modification. Out of seventeen opinions we find fifteen are for abandonment of the Bill, one for compromise, and one for persistence. Sir F. Roberts is against the Bill as it stands, explaining that he approved only of the very different and more limited scheme originally put forth. He warns the country, and his warning is echoed by others, that race-antagonism is not dying out as is frequently asserted. These warnings from practical men of simmering discontent contrast rather forcibly with Dr. Hunter's easy assumption that we have won the loyalty of India by our "pledges" and have nothing to do but retain it by fulfilling them. Three native officers in Madras approve the Bill, one is for compromise, and Sir Madhava Rao, while approving it, thinks it ought to be postponed.

The Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab has views of his own as to the conditions on which natives should be admitted to the privilege now sought to be somewhat promiscuously conferred, and he cannot be called a supporter of Mr. Ilbert. We have opinions from twenty-two European sources, of which sixteen are against the Bill, while five are for modification or postponement. There are seven native opinions, all favourable and most adducing reasons of the most transcendental kind. From the Central Provinces we have six opinions, of which two are hesitatingly and partially favourable. The late Chief Commissioner, while not unfavourable to the original proposal, holds that the present Bill should be dropped. The Governor of Bombay would restrict the scope of the Bill and would give every European the right to demand a jury of his countrymen, which would not add to administrative convenience in country districts. From Bombay we have eight European opinions against the Bill, four for compromise of various kinds, and eight native opinions in favour of the measure. In Coorg there are four Europeans against the Bill and one for compromise, while two natives are for it, and a third approves it, but counsels caution and delay.

In the North Western Provinces we have five distinct condemnations of the Bill, and four very hesitating and qualified approvals. All the four would clearly have preferred never to have heard of the measure, and now aim at some compromise which may reduce its power for mischief. There is one native in favour of the Bill. In British Burmah five are against the Bill, one for it, and one for compromise. It must be understood that opinions are frequently given in terms so guarded as to make it extremely difficult to classify them. It is not always the writer's object to range himself definitely on either side. It must further be remembered that we have no absolute guarantee that the papers are before us in their integrity. In the Bombay Presidency in particular there is a great discrepancy between the opinions that have reached us and those mentioned by our Calcutta correspondent. Summarising the foregoing, however, we find that we have 127 European opinions against the Bill, four in favour of it as it stands, and twenty for some sort of compromise, modification, or postponement. Of native opinions, we have thirteen against the Bill, forty-one for it, and two for compromise.

THE FINANCIAL STATUS OF THE ZEMINDARS.

(Hindoo Patriot.)

Having, in two previous articles, given summaries of all the latest and most reliable statistics relating to the ownership and yield of zemindaries, we shall now inquire what economic inferences are deducible therefrom. We have three classes to deal with; 1st Zemindars, including Revenue-freeholders*; 2nd Tenure-holders; 3rd Ryots. The first represent a body of 242,413 persons with an aggregate income of Rs. 5,21,10,286, giving an average of Rs. 214'9 per head. The second include a total of 11,35,222 owners with an aggregate income of Rs. 8,19,34,550, or an average of Rs. 72'1 per estate. The third remains unnumbered. According to the Report of the Famine Commissioners quoted by Sir Evelyn Baring in his speech on the Bengal Tenancy Bill, "there are 9,752,000 tenants in Bengal, of whom 2,789,000 pay a rent of from Rs. 5 to Rs. 20, and no less than 6,36,000 pay a rent of less than Rs. 5," which latter rate, he adds, "implies a holding of from two to three acres." The word "tenant," we believe, is an English rendering of the Indian ryot. If so, we have therein the total of ryots; but the average of their rental remains undetermined, the loose manner in which the averages are given not admitting of definite treatment. The figures, too, are apparently unreliable, and probably include a large number of the lower class tenure-holders. In another part of the speech we have, however, a significant fact, which, if reliable, would afford a very fair datum for calculation. We are told that "in Bengal the yearly value of crops per head of population is Rs. 15'9; the payments Rs. 0'81; the balance Rs. 15'1." Now, the population being sixty millions, the total value of the agricultural wealth possessed by that population would amount to 60,000,000 + 15'9 = Rs. 95,40,00,000. Deducting from this sum Rs. 13,11,68,432 + 8,19,34,550 = Rs. 21,31,02,982, being the sum total paid by ryots to tenure holders and zemindars, the balance Rs. 74,08,97,018 would represent primarily the income of the ryots. This would give an average of Rs. 75'9 per head: to the 97,52,000 tenants. The figures would then stand thus: 2,42,413 zemindars at Rs. 214'9 per head; 11,35,222 tenure-holders at Rs. 72'1 per head; 9,752,000 tenants at Rs. 75'97 per head. This is, however, not a fair representation of the case. The profits of the tenants represent the wages of their labour, and the cost of seed, manure and cattle, whereas in the cases of the zemindars and the tenure-holders we have the income of their capital in the form of real property, and exclusive of their personal labour. The comparison between zemindars and the tenure-holders is also open to a serious objection, inasmuch as it brings down the revenue of a lac and more a year to the level of the tenure-holder of R. 1 to Rs. 10. A few owners of large sums swell the average of the many poor owners, and thus mislead the statistician. The figures given in Mr. Grote's report for 1852-53 afford us fair and very useful data; but upwards of 60,000 redemptions of small estates have since taken place, and it is not possible, therefore, to make them correspond with Mr. Harrison's cess returns of 1878-79. The latter, besides, are not so classified into groups as to afford materials for comparison group by group. They contain, however, two columns of figures which are peculiarly significant. We are told, in the first place, that out of the total of 2,42,413 estates, 35,871 contribute over Rs. 100 of revenue per annum each, and 2,05,542 contribute under that sum. And secondly, 83,873 tenures pay over Rs. 100 per annum each in revenue, and 10,51,349 under that sum. Now, if we omit the 4,782 rich zemindars who get each over Rs. 5,000, and among them a total of Rs. 2,61,20,499, from the total of 242,413 zemindary estates under the cess returns as quite exceptional, and not representing the character of the great body of the zemindars, numbering 2,37,651 we come to an average of Rs. 109-9 against Rs. 72, the average of the tenure-holders, and Rs. 75'91 the average of the ryots. In the present state of our knowledge the case cannot be pushed further, but as it stands it does not show that the zemindars swallow the bulk of the ryots' earnings in the way the advocates of the tenancy Bill would have the public to believe. Again, if we bear in mind that first-class tenures like large taluks and patnis, existed in the early part of the century in the Hooghly and Burdwan districts, and are much more paying and profitable than most zemindaries, we shall find that, estate for estate, we have twice as many tenures as zemindaries, of equal average value, the relation being 83,873 to 35,871. In other words we have 2 tenure-holders for every zemindar of equal financial status. The term "equal" has to be understood in a technical sense with reference to the returns under notice. Those returns divide estates and tenures into two classes, those valued under Rs. 100, and those above that sum. The first class is right enough; but the second has a very wide range from

Rs. 101 to a hundred thousand or more, and the impropriety of lumping them all under one category becomes prominent. Had Mr. Harrison's tables been arranged on the model of those of Mr. Grote giving separate groups of 100 to 250, 250 to 500, 500 to 1,000, and so on, our comparison would have been much more satisfactory. According to Mr. Grote's zemindary tables, there were, in a total of 206,576, no less than 197,499 estates worth under Rs. 500 and barely 9,077 estates worth more than that sum in 1852-53. According to the income tax returns in 1860-61 there were 213,754 estates and tenures valued at over Rs. 200, and in 1863-64, raising the tax rate to 500, the total number brought under taxation was 51,279, showing that out of the total of 213,754, no less than 162,518 estates and tenures were valued at above Rs. 200 and under Rs. 500. Taking the zemindaries and tenures at 151,936 + 11,35,222 = 1,287,158, we have 213,754, valued at more than Rs. 200 a year, and barely 51,236 out of them worth more than Rs. 500 each. If returns could be had of the higher groups they would show that the fall is painfully rapid, and that of really rich classes the number is exceedingly limited. According to the cess returns the zemindary estates under Rs. 100 number 206,542, and the tenures of the same class represent a total of 1,051,349, i.e., for every zemindar of the lower class we have five persons of the same financial standing among the tenure-holders. Nor are the results here arrived at at all inconsistent with the general returns of the income tax operations of 1860 to 1864. From an abstract annexed below, it will be seen that out of a total of 60,000,000 of population there were in Bengal barely 992,587 persons in 1860-61 who from all sources of income, excepting Government service and interest on Government stocks, received more than Rs. 200 a year, and in 1863-64, only 76,584 received more than Rs. 500 a year. Out of the total no less than 209,743 reckoned between 500 and 1,000, and barely 79 got over a lakh. In taking into consideration these figures it should be remembered that if the returns are in any way unreliable they are so on the side of excess and severity, and not on that of leniency. The demand for was so universal against surcharges, and the people were so driven to despair, that the Government was driven to a corner, and obliged in very shame to abandon the tax. In England the "upper ten thousand" means the 10,000 or more persons who reckon their income at over £10,000 sterling a year, and the same class in Bengal is represented by seventy-nine persons.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EXPORTS OF WHEAT FROM THE PUNJAB TO ENGLAND.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In the Allahabad Pioneer Mail of the 2nd instant, page 210, we learn how a rapacious octroi tax is laid upon wheat in its transit to the sea. The extortions under the name of octroi are a disgrace to a Liberal Government, which boasts that it is bound for ever to the principles of free trade. As levied in India in open unvalled towns octroi is robbery. It falls with terrible weight on the poor; it offers great attractions to smugglers, who can easily evade it, and to men skilful in bribery, who can ignore it. England can draw for the sustenance of her sons enormous quantities of excellent wheat from the Punjab, but the trade must be made free: the cost of Punjab wheat is greatly increased as long as it has to pay a percentage in towns through which it passes: some of these octroi towns are unnoticed in gazetteers, and unrecorded in maps. How many of your readers can point out where Fasilka is?—Your obedient servant,

MISS FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—An article has appeared in the Contemporary Review for October, signed "Florence Nightingale," the style and matter of which are so peculiar, that it seems impossible that the paper should have emanated from the pen of the eminent lady bearing the above name, who has won universal respect and esteem from her devotion to the cause of humanity and justice. I would venture, therefore, to call the attention of your readers to the subject, in the hope of eliciting through some of them, whether the article was written by some other person bearing the same name as the distinguished lady I have referred to, or by one freely authorised to use the name of the latter. The purport of the article seems to be to support a Land Bill which is sometimes designated in it as the "Rent Bill," and at other times as the "Bengal Tenancy Bill."

The following extracts will suffice to show the writer's style:—

"The new Bill really carries out the Permanent Settlement. To read the Permanent Settlement is to have revealed to us peasants' rights we wot not of. We are yours, but the land is ours. No time is to be lost!"

"The illegal exactions levied on the ryots appear to be * The deduction made in our last article of 1-3rd for the revenue-free estates has caused some misunderstanding. The relation between the zemindary and revenue-free estates is as 2 to 5, and the deduction should have been 2-5ths and not 1-3rd; but we preferred the lower figure to provide for the average lower value of revenue-free estates. This should have been at the time explained to prevent misunderstanding.

suited to the fancy of the zemindars. We hear of asses extorted for their ladies' bracelets; asses for a zemindar's tooth powder.

"Not he who eats, but he who is eaten, payt. There is a Bengali proverb saying, 'The same love that a Mahomedan has to his fowl (he fattens in order to kill it), the same the zemindar has to the ryot.' Who stole the goose from the common? The common man. But who stole the common from the goose? The lord. Here are the wrongs, but where are the rights? Where is the remedy? To murder the land-lords? Certainly not. To use violence? Certainly not."

"Had a prophet like Nathan addressed the Englishman as he did David, and described the state of things as we know it to exist, would not the Englishman rise in his righteous wrath to redress the wrong and punish the wrong-doer?"

So much for the style. As for the matter, while the article entirely lacks argument, it is replete with glaring mis-statements. Its professed object is to protect the ryot, or cultivating tenant, yet it passes lightly over the clause of the Tenancy Bill which leaves the cultivators entirely at the mercy of the superior landholders, observing casually,

"A question started against the new Bill—that it may create middle-men who will grind down the ryots—is a very serious consideration. This hits the weakest part of the Bill. In Ireland the feriiles are given to the actual cultivators. In Bengal this does not seem to be so."

What benefit, then, does the Bill purport to confer on the cultivators? My object, however, is not to discuss the Bill, but to discover the author of the article, and to be able, if possible, to exonerate of serious blame the person whose name is appended to it.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

LIBERAL ASSOCIATIONS AND THE ILBERT BILL. TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I observe from a paragraph in the Times, that the Liberal Association of Bath has listened to an address from Sir Charles Hobhouse on current affairs in India, and has thereon passed a resolution in support of Mr. Ilbert's Bill. Will you permit me, through the medium of the Times, to appeal to the sense of fairness of any other Liberal Associations who may think of following the example of the Bath Association, with the respectful suggestion that, before passing such a resolution, they should invite Mr. F. T. Atkins, of Allahabad, to address them on the other side? Mr. Atkins is (like the President of the Anglo-Indian Defence Association in Calcutta), a good sound Liberal. He has been formally, and by resolutions passed unanimously in public meetings, delegated by all or nearly all, the Working Men's Associations of India, to represent their views and interest in this matter to the people of England. The English love of fair play will surely grant him a hearing. Being a Liberal, he is naturally anxious to address himself in the first place to Liberal Associations; and he authorises me to say that he will gladly accept, so far as he is able to do so during his brief stay in England, any such invitations as those I have ventured to suggest. His address is, "care of Messrs. Keymer and Co., agents, 1, Whitefriars-street, Fleet-street, E.C."

Will you allow me, as Hon. Secretary of the London Committee of Anglo-Indians, formed to protest against Mr. Ilbert's Bill, to take this opportunity of laying very prominently before the British public the fact, that our committee is formed on a strictly non-political basis—that its executive consists largely of pronounced Liberals, as well as of Conservatives—and that we have (both by formal resolution in committee, and otherwise, scrupulously abstained from identifying ourselves with any of the great political parties in the State? Accordingly, we have felt ourselves precluded, as a body, from accepting the aid of any of the existing political organisations in our endeavours to put the merits of the case before the public. Trusting entirely to the just influence that the opinions and warnings of experience and practical knowledge will surely exercise on English public opinion, we have refrained, on similar grounds, from publishing any list of the numerous Statesmen and politicians, other than bond fide Anglo-Indians, whose sympathies are known to be with us. When Liberal Associations, as such, pass resolutions in favour of Mr. Ilbert's Bill—and when the supporters of that Bill publish lists of "Friends and adherents," consisting largely of the names of members of Parliament of undeniably extreme party views—it seems only fair that the above facts should be generally known. I feel confident that a generous consideration of them will induce many Liberal Associations to give Mr. Atkins a friendly and impartial hearing.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

MAIL NEWS.

The Secretariat Offices close at Simla on the 10th, and re-open at Calcutta on the 26th November. The Viceroy will leave Simla earlier and probably visit Cashmere.

The Commander-in-Chief (Sir Donald Stewart) leaves Simla on the 24th October on his winter tour.

The protracted suit in which Miss Pigot, late superintendent of the Scottish Ladies' Association in Calcutta, sues the Rev. Mr. Hastie, Principal of the General Assembly's Institution, for Rs. 20,000 as damages for defamation, came to a close in the week preceding the departure of the mail. The defendant's examination and cross-examination concluded on the 6th, and a large number of witnesses have since been examined for the defence, including Colonel Walker, head of the Small Ammunition Factory at Kirkee, and his wife, whose name has been so often mentioned in the course of the hearing of the case as the author of a leaflet referring to Miss Pigot. The cross-examination of Miss Pigot commenced on Wednesday and was concluded on Thursday. Our correspondent says that the witness was nervous, and that she hesitated and contradicted herself. One or two unimportant witnesses were examined, and Mr. Trevelyan then addressed the court for the plaintiff. He apologised for the manner of the plaintiff's evidence on the ground that she was not accustomed to courts; that the case had been weighing on her mind; and that she had been badgered, or at any rate pressed, by the defendant's counsel. The cross-examination opened up entirely new ground, and referred to plaintiff's acquaintance with immoral characters. When Mr. Trevelyan had concluded, Mr. Gasper addressed the Court, and in a very impassioned speech sympathised with Mr. Justice Norris in the conclusion to which he had been driven, that the plaintiff's case had completely broken down. He contended that the defendant's case was supported by disinterested and unimpeachable witnesses, and that their statements had been met by nothing but bare denial on the other side by witnesses who were bound to deny everything. In delivering judgment on Saturday before a crowded court, his lordship held that Miss Pigot had been guilty of adultery with Baboo Kali Churn Banerjee, Dr. Chandra, and Mr. Wilson. One of the charges of cruelty brought against Miss Pigot by the Rev. Mr. Hastie was, however, not proved, and his lordship, therefore, gave judgment for the plaintiff, assessing the damages at one anna, and ordering each party to pay their own costs.

The health of the Maharaja of Cashmere is reported to be somewhat worse.

Some interest has been excited in India in consequence of the sun presenting a peculiar greenish appearance at certain periods of the day. It is believed that the phenomenon is due to the passage across India of a tremendous volume of sulphurous vapour, arising from the recent volcanic disturbance in the Sunda Straits.

Lieut.-Col. Frederick Donnelly Harrington, Bengal S.O., Deputy Commissioner of Gujrat, committed suicide last week by blowing out his brains.

Good rain had fallen in nearly every part of the country during the fortnight preceding the departure of the mail, and all apprehensions of scarcity have been entirely removed.

Cholera was rapidly decreasing in Bombay, the returns for both the city and the districts showing a substantial diminution in the mortality from the disease.

The Poona Races came to a close on Saturday, Sept. 15, after a very successful meeting, the entries having been unusually large, and the sport excellent.

Owing to the depressed condition of the Municipal finances, the Bombay Town Council have reduced the grant of Rs. 50,000, recommended by the Corporation for the festivities consequent upon the reception of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, to Rs. 2,000.

Extensive frauds have been discovered in the Bank of Bombay. Two Parsee cashiers of the bank are in custody on charges of defrauding the bank of large sums of money. The head cashier was in receipt of a salary of Rs. 700 a month. An examination of the bank's cash has shown the total deficiency to be Rs. 63,000.

THE ABOLITION OF CONTRACT BY THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE appearance of Mr. Borlase, M.P., on the committee of an Indian Reform Association shows that the extreme section of the Radical party at home is preparing to support Lord Ripon's attack on the landholders of Bengal and Behar in the Bengal Tenancy Bill. We hope and believe, however, that that support will only be given by the most violent and revolutionary "land-reformers;" for the mischievous and indeed fatal character of the legislation proposed by Mr. Ilbert and the Viceroy will clearly affect, not the landlords of Bengal alone, but in even a greater degree the actual cultivators, who will be left entirely at the mercy of the middlemen, whom Mr. Ilbert is investing with uncontrolled powers of oppression. The introduction of the principle of the transferability of occupancy rights will undoubtedly be equivalent to the establishment of serfdom throughout Bengal.

Mischief and suffering, hardly less grave, will also be inflicted on the ryots by the abolition of freedom of contract in agricultural transactions. "Notwithstanding any contract to the contrary"—that is a phrase that constantly meets the eye in this Bill, and is indeed so characteristic of the lawlessness and bad faith of the whole of the proposed legislation, that it might serve as a motto for the supporters of the Bill. It is declared by Mr. Ilbert, in his Statement of Objects and Reasons, to be "essential;" and we have no doubt that Mr. Ilbert, after the manner of his academic school of politicians, is "cock-sure" that, in insisting on this principle, he is doing the ryots a service. He condescends to give the reasons for his belief, by quoting from a letter of the Government of India, which doubtless conveys his own views at a somewhat earlier period. He says:—

"Such is the power of the zemindars, so numerous and effective are the means possessed by most of them for inducing the raiyats to accept agreements which, if history, custom, and expediency be regarded, are wrongful and contrary to good policy, that to uphold contracts in contravention of the main purpose of the Bill would be, in our belief, to condemn it to defeat and failure. It is absolutely necessary that such contracts should be disallowed, and in this conclusion we have the support not only of the Bengal Government, but also of the almost unanimous opinions of the Bengal officers."

The "almost unanimous opinions of the Bengal officers" is somewhat vague; and reminds one a little of the "overwhelming consensus of official opinion" with which, Mr. Ilbert last March assured the Viceroy's Legislative Council, another famous measure of his was supported. Most of the "opinions of Bengal officers" to which we have had access have happened to be exactly opposed to these "almost unanimous opinions;" and though it is, of course, quite possible that they may be exceptions that prove the rule, still, it is also possible that Mr. Ilbert may have generalised too hastily from a limited number of opinions before him, as he certainly did on another occasion. We doubt very much whether the practical and experienced officers of Bengal would support such a measure as the wholesale sweeping away of contracts, past, present, and future, as Lord Ripon now proposes. It is true that the ryots will be the chief gainers by Lord Ripon's application of the sponge so freely to past and existing contracts—simply because Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert take care to enact at the same time that all contracts in favour of the ryot shall still be strictly enforced, "notwithstanding any legislation to the contrary." But who, we ask, will be the real sufferers by the abolition of contracts in the future? Will it be the zemindars, who, according to Mr. Ilbert, already possess all the advantages enumerated above, which hardly need to be increased under contracts, and which ought to enable them to get on very comfortably without contracts? Will it not rather, and most obviously, be the ryot who will suffer by a provision that deprives him of the right of an intelligent human being to avail himself of the protection of the law, in settling the terms of his agreement with the landlord? To the landlord, the loss of the right to contract—though insulting and often vexatious—can seldom be a matter of the first importance. For instance, even in regard to the acquisition of occupancy rights by a settled ryot holding ryoti land—the case over which Mr. Ilbert shouts his war-cry of "Notwithstanding any contract to the contrary," with greatest gusto—a zemindar who is evilly disposed, or who thinks himself justified in treating his ryots with the same bad faith that is shown to himself by the Government, would be able, if sufficiently unscrupulous, to "walk round" the Act. But to the ryot it will often be a matter of great convenience, nay, of the highest importance, to be able to secure some considerable personal benefit in return for the relinquishment of his rights under this clause of the Act; and this, if the Bill passes, he will be absolutely unable to do. Often it will happen that the ryot, under this grandmotherly legislation, being unable to enter into a legal and binding contract, to obtain an advantage of great importance to him, will have to give vastly more in some one of those numerous illegal or circuitous ways which are always devised to meet the necessities of such cases. Every economist knows that usury laws mean ruinous interest for those who can least afford it, illegal understandings, and demoralisation. High customs-duties mean not only high prices, but also extensive smuggling; and so in everything. And the abolition of freedom of contract in agricultural negotiations in Bengal will most infallibly produce a vast deal of utterly gratuitous suffering on the part of those whom the Government professes to wish to benefit, together with much underhand and illegal bargaining and wide-spread demoralisation. As the Maharajah of Darbhanga well put it, in the debate in the Viceroy's Legislative Council last March, "Parties understand their own interests better, and it is idle for the Legislature to affect to protect their interests." It is, at any rate, worse than idle for the Legislature to attempt to do so, on the strength of such a limited comprehension of the real nature of those interests, as that displayed by Mr. Ilbert.

THE SO-CALLED "INDIAN REFORM ASSOCIATION."

At the cost of giving a prominent advertisement to a movement that we regard as one of the most deplorable that has ever threatened the welfare of our Indian Empire, we publish elsewhere in extenso the prospectus of the proposed "Indian Reform Association," that has been issued by the Committee calling itself "the British India Committee"—together with the list of "Members and adherents" of that Committee. The curious composition of the Committee—which consists of a few fanatical humanity-mongers, a great many extremely violent Radicals of the anti-landlord school, some well-meaning and promising young Indian students, and the Raja Rampal Singh—reveals only too clearly the origin of the proposed Association, and the modes by which its aims are expected to be realised. It shows that the representatives of "Young India" in this country have now, despite the oft-repeated warnings of many of their truest friends, allowed themselves to be caught by the chaff of the smallest, noisiest, and least reputable party in English politics. Baited with the flattering imposture of the Ilbert Bill—which is seen through by statesmen of the calibre of Sir Madhava Rao and Sir Dinkar Rao, but may well deceive less experienced minds—the net of such astute fowls as Mr. Foggo and Dr. G. B. Clark has not been spread in vain, in the sight of these young gentlemen and their kind-hearted and too impulsive leader, Raja Rampal Singh. That the action of the students will be endorsed by any considerable section of their countrymen in India, we do not for a moment believe; and we sincerely hope that the young gentlemen themselves will take the earliest possible opportunity of reconsidering their position. We believe that, without a single exception, every front rank native politician in India agrees with us in most earnestly deprecating any attempt to attach the vast and ever-changing interests of India to the fluctuating fortunes of any English political party. Apart from the immorality of such a course, its political inexpediency must surely be obvious to every intelligent Indian. From the very low and time-serving standpoint of the political intriguer and wirepuller, it might, perhaps, be imagined that to stand well with the existing Government of the day, even at the cost of alienating the sympathies of other parties in the State, must be a good thing; but these short-sighted gentlemen ignore the fact that, in England, Governments do not last for ever. And in the present case, our young Indian friends have gone even further than this; they have deliberately joined themselves, in a political movement, to the small and aggressive section of a party that is (from its very nature) disliked almost as much by the great body of Liberals as by the Conservatives, and that is certainly very unlikely ever to be in a position to offer the slightest effective assistance to its misguided allies. We do not think the responsible leaders of the native community, even in the least advanced provinces of India, are likely to fall into such a very unattractive trap as this; or to commit the egregious blunder of joining themselves to a band of political Ishmaelites, whose hand is against every man's, whose chief characteristic is a Catholic uncharitableness, and who join in attacking English "ascendency" in India in the same spirit that leads them impartially to loathe Mr. Gladstone's policy in Egypt, and to detest the very names of Pitt, Palmerston, and Beaconsfield. Happily for England and for the Empire, the very slight nature of the hold that this anti-English spirit has acquired, even on the classes most liable to be imposed upon by the cant and clap-trap by which it is propagated, has been made clearly manifest to the whole world in the result of the recent Manchester election.

With the aims professed by these young Indian gentlemen and their extreme Radical friends we have the most entire sympathy. We should gladly hail any movement calculated really and honestly to educate English public opinion on Indian matters. We already have two Associations, the East India and the National Indian, doing excellent work in this direction, each in its own sphere; and the activity of each of these Associations is capable of indefinite extension, and is at present limited only by the limited number and scanty leisure of the labourers willing to toil in this field of usefulness. In each of the existing Associations, every shade of English political opinion is represented and respected—a principle that is absolutely essential for the just and impartial treatment of Indian questions; and it would be a very serious calamity for India, if the revolt against this broad and liberal principle, indicated in the institution of the new "Reform" Association, and due to the narrow-mindedness of intolerant and undisciplined Radicalism, were to receive any support from native opinion. That narrow-minded intolerance characteristic of modern Radicalism,—which is never so entirely in its element as when it is setting races or communities by the ears—is well illustrated, in the circular of which we are treating, by the delicate terms of implied calumny in which the English in India, both official and non-official, are spoken of. Professor Markby's many friends and admirers will see with surprise and regret his name printed in the motley list of those who are responsible for this circular, under the chairmanship of Dr. G. B. Clark; and they will have every right to ask him whether he really endorses the cowardly (because decently-veiled) slander obviously implied in the following passages:—

"To such a court the people of India may come with confidence. They well know that in the English people at large they will find the sympathy and goodwill which they cannot always expect on the part of those who, in India, are their rivals and competitors. . . . It is not to be expected that either a governing class, or rivals in trade and commerce, can always judge impartially in reference to demands made by Indians of proved capacity and good social position, demands which are the necessary result of our past legislation and administration."

It is perfectly obvious that these words repeat, in rather a meaner and baser form, the very slander against which Mr. Markby felt himself bound to protest when put forward somewhat more coarsely by Mr. Bright. And yet, here we find them in a circular that is being widely circulated, accompanied by a committee-list in which we find Mr. Markby's name!

The most significant name, however, on the committee of the new Association will at once be seen to be that of Mr. Borlase, M.P., the Chairman of the Farmers' Alliance, and the apostle of the most advanced school of English "land-reform." It is somewhat odd to note that the name of this redoubtable "exterminator of landlords" directly follows, on the list, that of Mr. Bhownagree, the gentleman who ably represents in this country the interests of H.H. the Maharajah of Bhownagree. English landlords will probably feel grateful to Mr. Bhownagree if he can induce Mr. Borlase to expend his destructive energies on the corpora villa of Indian landlords, in the campaign that has been opened (in the Bengal Tenancy Bill) against the Zemindars, and that must logically be extended subsequently to the Native Chiefs. But however that may be, we have no hesitation in expressing our deep regret that any body of Indian gentleman, however small, should have been so ill-advised as to admit to the councils of an Indian Reform Association such firebrands as Mr. Borlase and his friends, just at the present juncture when we are evidently approaching a great crisis in the Indian land question.

HOME NEWS.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—Tenders for Rs.25,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on Wednesday at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—In bills on Bombay, Rs.50,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7'562d.; in telegraphic transfers on Calcutta, Rs.4,00,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7'625d.; on Bombay, Rs.17,50,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7'639d.; and on Madras, Rs.1,00,000, at an average rate of 1s. 7'625d., or a total remittance of Rs.23,00,000. Tenders for bills at 1s. 7 9-16d. received in full, and for telegraphic transfers on all Presidencies at 1s. 7½d. about 50 per cent., and above in full. Subsequently the Council disposed of a lakh and a-half of transfers on Calcutta at 1s. 7 21-32d. Between April 1 and Oct. 2 the total amount of bills and transfers sold reached Rs.9,44,47,150, and realised £7,652,042.

THE SILVER MARKET AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.—The directors of the Bank of Bombay have raised their discount rate to 8 per cent. This dearthness of money in India, coupled with short supplies of silver on this side, caused a recovery on Wednesday in the price of fine bars to the level quoted on Monday, some business having been done at 50 15-16d. per ounce. The allotment of Council remittances, considering that the Doorga Poojah holidays in Calcutta are close at hand, was also rather better than had been expected, and the market closed firm. Mexican dollars remained at 49 11-16d. per ounce, with little or no business. Indian rates for telegraphic transfers were quoted at 1s. 7 19-32d. in Bombay and Calcutta, the Hong Kong rate for four months' bills being rather higher at 3s. 8¼d. The advance in the value of money in India caused a fall in Four per Cent. Rupee Paper there. The same security here receded to 80 to 80½, but the Four-and-a-Half per Cents. were unaltered at 84½ to 84¾. On Thursday the market was quiet, and no alteration took place in prices. The exchanges from the East were unaltered. Telegraphic transfers on Calcutta to the amount of Rs.15,00,000, and on Madras to the amount of Rs.10,00,000 were sold at the Bank of England, the price being 1s. 7 21-32 per rupee. On Friday the position of the market was unchanged and stocks were very small. A little more business was done in bars and dollars at 51 15-16d. and 49 11-16d. per oz. respectively. Indian and China exchanges remained unaltered. The Doorga and Poojah holidays, which began in Calcutta on Saturday, will terminate on the evening of the 17th inst. Rupee Paper closed rather easier, at 84½ to 84¾ for the Four-and-a-Half, and 80 to 80½ for the Four per Cents.

OBITUARY.—General Andrew Macqueen, of the Vanbrugh-park-road, Blackheath, and of the Bengal Staff Corps, died suddenly on Oct. 3, at the house of Dr. Fegan, Westcombe-park, Blackheath. The deceased entered the Army in 1839 as cornet in the 42nd Bengal Native Infantry. He served throughout the operations of the Candahar force under General Nott in 1840-42, including the advance upon Ghuznee and Cabul and the capture of Istaliff. He served also throughout the Sutlej campaign of 1845-6, taking part in the battles of Moodhee, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon. He was likewise engaged during the Indian Mutiny campaigns of 1857-59, including the relief of Lucknow, the defeat of Gwalior contingent at Cawnpore, the siege and capture of Lucknow, and the battles of Baree and Simree. The gallant officer obtained the brevet rank of colonel in 1870, and was promoted to major-general in 1881.

CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LONDON, AND CHINA.—The directors recommend a dividend for the half-year ended June 30 last at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum.

THE ASSAM RAILWAYS.—A telegram has been received by the directors of the Assam Railways and Trading Company (Limited) from the engineers in Assam, reporting that the rainy season having ceased, works have re-commenced; that the bridge over the Dehing river was practically completed; that the output of the coal from the mines reaches 2,000 tons weekly, and that it was expected that coal trains would be running between the mines and the Brahmapootra river within sixty working days.

MYSORE GOLD MINING COMPANY.—An extraordinary general meeting of the proprietors of this company was held at the City Terminus Hotel on Friday, for the purpose of considering the report of Mr. Frank Taylor and Mr. Bell Davies on the condition of the company's property; Mr. Charles Tennant, M.P., presided. The chairman, in opening the proceedings, said that the directors had been greatly disappointed at finding Mr. Taylor had formed an unfavourable opinion of the effect which the hard rock, encountered at so many of the deeper points during the operations of the past few months, had had on the quartz veins, and the hard rock was of such an unkindly nature as to be fatal to the continuity of the quartz vein. He entertained great doubts also as to there being true fissure veins. On the other hand, Mr. Bell Davies, after the perusal of Mr. Taylor's report, adhered to the belief that veins were to be found beyond the rocky obstruction, and that to stop going on sinking would be simply to throw away money. Captain Plummer who had long been connected with mining operations in the Mysore District, confirmed this view. The board attached value to Captain Plummer's opinion. On the other hand, it was only fair to state that Mr. Fitzmaurice, the commercial manager of the mines, had expressed an opinion coinciding with that of Mr. Taylor, but as he was not an expert not much importance was attached to his views, more especially as prior to Mr. Taylor's report he had expressed himself hopefully with regard to the prospects of the mine. The shareholders, therefore, had to judge between these conflicting opinions. They had, fortunately, a little additional light thrown on their position as they had on the previous day received a telegram from the mine, stating that "In 173 ft. level south, 12in. wide, north 9 in. wide, the average assay for the last fortnight was 8dwt. 5 grains. Exploring rapidly and economically large extent of ground. Machinery in good order." That information appeared to him to be very satisfactory. But before the receipt of this telegram the directors had, after much anxious consideration, decided to go on with the exploration suggested by Mr. Taylor at the southern border of the property. The board were not without hope, and after their past experience they could not allow themselves to be sanguine, but they thought that to abandon the undertaking at this stage would be unwise. That gold mining was really a lottery all knew, but he inclined to think that, with sufficient funds in hand—say about £18,000—they should go on. In conclusion, he desired to say that none of the directors had parted with any of their shares, but that some of them had added to their holding. Mr. Webber, Mr. John Taylor, Mr. Johns, and other gentlemen urged the importance of going on with the work of exploration. Ultimately a resolution, moved by Mr. Johns, requesting the directors to continue the operations, was agreed to, and the proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

FROM THE

ON

THACKERAY.

RUSSIA.

CARRIAGES, ROADS, AND COACHES.

BY

SEPT. BERDMORE (NIMSHIVICH).

With Notes and Additions.

From The Academy, April 28, 1877.
 But the article of the number is one on 'The Kitchen and the Cellar,' a survey of British and Foreign cookery, after a lapse of forty years since last the oracle of the Quarterly spoke on the subject. . . . The article discusses what elements of cooking for private households in France we can import with advantage into this country, and finds the secret in a better understood herbal flavour in soups, the more perfect grilling of the French charcoal fuel, and the cleanliness with which fish, flesh, and fowl are thus grilled, and served with perfectly and separately made sauces. In connection with the cellar, the writer considers the universal introduction of red wines for dinner as important for the palate as the amelioration of soups."
 From "Our Van," Baily's Magazine, November, 1877.
 "The current number of the Quarterly Review contains a paper which will most certainly be read with much interest at the present time. . . . The paper in question, entitled 'Carriages, Roads, and Coaches,' treats (and in a most exhaustive manner, too) of all sorts of conveyances, used for business as well as for pleasure, their various shapes and builds, and of the materials of which they are composed. . . . The roads on which we ride and drive are also most elaborately discussed; and the merits and demerits of wood, granite, asphalt, and macadam most artistically defined. . . . Tramways, the greatest nuisances, (barring, probably, bicycles) to driving and riding, are also fully expatiated upon; harness and other appointments are treated of in their proper places; and the whole concludes with a lengthened dissertation upon coaching, past and present; driving, professional and amateur; the times kept; the financial status of the coaches that are now on the road; a few good hints to both coachmen and guards; all of which will be found instructive as well as amusing."

GUJARAT AND THE GUJARATIS:
 PICTURES OF MEN AND MANNERS
 TAKEN FROM LIFE BY

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A quaint and undoubtedly clever book from the pen of a native of India. The volume consists of a series of short sketches of scenes and people in Gujarat, which may be regarded as typical of classes of the community, their ways of life and modes of thought. Mr. Malabari's English style is remarkably good, and seldom exhibits any want of ease. His book is of special interest as throwing some light on the real feeling of the natives with regard to their British rulers." Daily Telegraph.

"The book is clever throughout."—Academy.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly diamond ornaments. ## THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE ILBERT BILL.

THE LOCAL OPINIONS ON THE BILL TO AMEND THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.

THE GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL.

From F. B. Peacock, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Judicial, Political, and Appointment Departments, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Legislative Department.

Darjeeling, June 22.

Judicial.

SIR,—I am directed by the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal to submit his opinion upon the Bill to amend the Criminal Procedure Code, to which his attention was called in your letter, No. 25 C., dated the 17th March last. On receipt of that letter a circular was issued to commissioners of divisions, inviting an expression of their views upon the subject, after consulting selected officers interested in the measure and qualified to express an opinion upon it. Copies of the replies received have already been forwarded from time to time for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council. This is the first time that an opportunity has been offered to the Bengal Government and its officers to report upon the Bill; and though the Lieutenant Governor has little doubt that the impassioned controversy which has arisen since the intention to legislate was declared has strongly influenced opinions on both sides of the questions, the fact remains that the general result, as gathered from the replies received, is, both in the number and weight of judgment decidedly against the principle and policy of the proposal. It appears that, excluding the judges of the High Court in Calcutta, whose reply has been submitted direct to the Government of India, there were seventy-nine officers in Lower Bengal whose reports appear in the published replies; and from as fair an analysis of these reports as can be made, the result is that, while twenty gentlemen approve of the principle of the Bill, and would recommend its enactment, there are fifty-nine who are either entirely against it, or who, accepting the soundness of the theory upon which the Bill is based, object for one reason or another to its being passed into law. Of the twenty writers in favour of the measure, fourteen are natives, and one (Mr. Coldren) is a gentleman connected with the American mission in the district of Balasore. All but one of the nineteen natives are in the public service, and include the two covenanted civilians, now officiating as magistrates and collectors in charge of districts. The others, with two exceptions, one of whom is a Government pleader, are deputy magistrates and deputy collectors in Government employ. Mr. Coldren, to whom reference has been made, is an American; and though in his brief remarks he records his personal support of the Bill, he adds that from inquiries made he finds that a large majority of the leading members of the Christian community under him are not in favour of having native gentlemen to try Europeans. Out of the fifty-nine gentlemen opposed to the proposed legislation, it will be sufficient to notice that the list comprises the superintendent and remembrancer of legal affairs, all the commissioners of divisions, all the district officers and judges who were consulted, and includes Mr. Badshah, the covenanted native civilian in charge of the sub division of Goalundo, nine native officers of Government, eight of whom are in the uncovenanted service (most of them being deputy magistrates), and one a Government pleader, besides three native gentlemen in independent positions unconnected with Government employment. Besides these, it is evident that several other gentlemen, whose replies have not been forwarded, had expressed opinions unfavourable to the Bill, and that the non-official European community is unanimously opposed to it. If the Lieutenant Governor had had any doubts regarding the necessity or the policy of the contemplated legislation before, he must say that they would have been entirely removed by the great weight and numerical superiority of the earnest arguments now adduced in condemnation of the Bill, and he has only, therefore, to say that the opposition which he has consistently maintained to the introduction of the measure from its first submission to the Executive Council of the Government of India in 1881 has only been confirmed and strengthened by the later developments of the discussion.

2. Before referring to the grounds upon which this opposition, in which Mr. Rivers Thompson regrets to find himself at variance with his Excellency the Governor General in Council, is based, I am directed to notice some points in the Bill which demand consideration. If the Bill, as it has been circulated for opinion, is passed—(1) all native sessions judges and magistrates of districts will, by virtue of their office, be empowered to exercise the same jurisdiction over European British subjects as now belongs to European officials in the same positions; and (2) any native magistrate of the first class who is a covenanted or statutory civilian, or who is an assistant commissioner in a non-regulation province, or a cantonment magistrate, may be invested, at the discretion of Government, with similar powers. Hitherto, the Government has widely exercised the power of appointing as justices of the peace many Europeans who, not being in the Government service, do not come within any of the classes above mentioned, and a great administrative convenience has been thereby secured. The withdrawal of this power, even if vested interests are saved, will, in the Lieutenant Governor's opinion, operate to the detriment of the administration of justice, because it may very well happen that in many places, such as the minor seaports, out-of-the-way sub-divisions, and occasionally, at railway stations, the services of an honorary (European) magistrate would secure all that was requisite, when neither covenanted nor statutory civilians were available for the duty. This omission, of course, might be easily remedied, but if it is remedied by the reservation of such powers in the hands of Government as now obtain, it is obvious that one principle upon which the Bill is based will be compromised, and the limitation of the grant of such judicial powers to European British subjects alone could not be defended. As the Lieutenant Governor understands, however, the Government of India is not prepared to go to the extent of conferring such powers upon natives generally.

3. Again, in the matter of cantonments, the observations of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, speaking with the authority of Government in the debate of March 9 last, seem to show that there was no intention of conferring the office of cantonment magistrate upon natives. It is not readily intelligible why, if race distinctions in judicial offices are untenable, such distinctions should be entertained in favour of the military, and not of the civil population of the country; but assuming that the decision is final (and the Lieutenant Governor is clearly of opinion that the decision is a right one) clause (d), section 1 of the Bill will have to be amended. But in this connection it is necessary to direct attention to paragraph 11 of the report received from the Commissioner of Orissa, where he points out that in Cuttack the joint magistrate, or, in his absence, the magistrate of the district, exercises the judicial powers of the cantonment magistrate, and "if neither of these officers should be a native, he would, as cantonment magistrate, under the Bill exercise the jurisdiction which his Excellency appeared unwilling to accede." However, supposing the Bill to be modified as suggested, the difficulty, though involving an anomaly, might be met by the executive arrangement of never appointing a native covenanted civilian to the magistracy or joint magistracy of Cuttack.

4. The Bill, as it proposes to enlarge the powers of assistant commissioners in non-regulation provinces, does not affect any of the districts under the Bengal administration, and the Lieutenant Governor may leave it to others to deal with this clause. He would only remark that it very often happens that an assistant commissioner is a native, in no respects different from the deputy magistrates of the Regulation Province, and with but a tinge of the experience which the older deputy magistrates possess in the administration of the criminal law. If the deputy magistrate is not to exercise jurisdiction over European British subjects, there is a much more forcible reason why the native assistant commissioner should not have such a power. The case as regards the statutory civilians seems stronger still; and the Lieutenant Governor is constrained to refer more at length to the question as it concerns the officers appointed under 33 Vic. chap. 3, because his own judgment is here entirely in accord with the great majority of those who have commented upon and condemned the proposal. The system under which natives of India are thus admitted to the covenanted Civil Service of the country has been in force for three or four years. Altogether, up to the present moment, six gentlemen have obtained appointments to the covenanted Civil Service under the statute, and all of them are still assistants to magistrates and collectors, and four only out of the six have passed the preliminary departmental examinations which qualify them for promotion. It may be accepted, then, as certain that it will take at least seven or eight more years before any of these officers will be in a position to enjoy the dignity of an officiating magistrate and collector of a district. The chances of advancement to a sessions judgeship are even more remote. On the ground, then, of any immediate necessity for legislation on their behalf, even if the principle of the Bill be affirmed, no cause whatever can be shown. But this is only a very small part of the question. The system itself is in an early and experimental stage of its operation; and if it is to be continued, which the Lieutenant Governor considers is to evoke discussion very soon (because any system of nomination is objectionable, and, as against Europeans and Eurasians in India, one of the worst anomalies based on purely birth and race distinctions), it has not yet justified, and probably never will justify, the conclusion that the men so selected and admitted to a great service will be competent for other than subordinate positions in it. This is the common testimony, with a few exceptions, of all the reports upon the Bill. It is quite truly represented that these nominated officers, chosen very often more for their social connections than for any other qualifications, have given no guarantees of ability and character which should place them in the same category as the officers who have faced the difficulties and disabilities of a voyage across the seas, and have, by open competition in England, won their place in the Civil Service. What the Commissioner of the Presidency Division says upon this part of the subject is quite true—"The officers of the native Civil Service come from the same classes as those from which the uncovenanted service is recruited. They have the same race feelings as those of their brethren of the latter service; and, save that they are not so experienced or so hard-working, there is no difference, as regards race qualification or disqualification, between a deputy magistrate and a member of the native Civil Service under the statute 33 Vic., chap. 3." There is no magic in the words "covenanted service," which should be able to transform young men, taken from the same ranks as the general run of the subordinate executive service, into superior beings fitted for posts of high responsibility. If anything is gained by a temporary sojourn of some three years in England, which is claimed for the covenanted native civilian who enters the service by competition, the advantage is wholly wanting in the case of the statutory officers. There can be no kind of assurance that in their case they will be free from native thoughts and native prejudices; and ignorance of the ways and habits of Europeans is a distinct disqualification for dealing with criminal prosecutions against Europeans. The Lieutenant Governor would ask attention to the forcible remarks made by the magistrate and collector of the 24-Pergunnahs upon this point. Mr. C. C. Stevens, the officer in question, has had twenty years' experience in many districts in Bengal. His whole career has been marked with an intelligent desire for the promotion of native interests. He has had under him in his district work native civilians of both classes, and his report throughout expresses that sense of regret which every one must share with him at having to deal with a question of such invidious delicacy for such a cause as this Bill represents. Yet the fact is apparent, not from his report only, but from the reports of many other competent officers (and in this native opinion seems to be almost as decided as European), that there is an essential difference between these two classes of native civilians, and that if the large body of uncovenanted officers are to be excluded from having jurisdiction in cases against Europeans on the ground of unfitness, the disability extends with greater force to those of the covenanted service who enter it by nomination in India.

5. The Lieutenant Governor is quite willing to recognise that the case of competition native civilians stands on a different footing. They have made sacrifices to secure the honourable positions which they hold, and they are sacrifices of a kind which Englishmen, of all people in the world, are best able to appreciate. They have abandoned caste, they have surrendered religious feelings, they have broken family ties, and set themselves against the devout sentiments and doctrines of their ancient creeds. The sentiment may not be so strong now as it was fifteen or twenty years ago; but apart from the religious aspect of the case, the expenses incurred in such an undertaking, and the risks of a long sea voyage (exaggerated in its perils to every native mind) to a foreign country, where they must live as strangers, and encounter in the competition for the prize they are seeking a large body of English youth, who have enjoyed the advantage of the highest training and education—all these circumstances justify a claim to consideration on the part of the Government. There is weight, too, in the argument, which finds a place in many of the papers, that with the attainment of the status of a district officer, whether he be European or native, there should be no distinction on the ground of nationality in the powers and privileges to be exercised. As an abstract proposition the Lieutenant Governor assents to this; and, indeed, with much which Mr. Justice Romesh Chunder Mitter advances in his minute of May 25, 1883, the Lieutenant Governor would be willing to agree, if the promise could be accepted that to administrators and statesmen the policy of the measure was irrelevant and a matter of indifference. The learned Judge carefully excludes himself, as a judicial officer, from all such considerations in the opening paragraph of his memorandum; but it can scarcely be conceded that we are in India simply to make our laws symmetrical and to redress the sentimental grievances of an infinitesimal minority. They are high-sounding phrases which have appeared very frequently in the discussions upon this controverted measure, which talk of the abolition of "race distinctions" judicially, and the suppression of what one officer has called the enormous force of argument that is supposed to lie in the word "anomaly." But it appears to the Lieutenant Governor that time at least as shown, if not the arguments of the opponents of the Bill, that the attempt to remove a single petty anomaly, which injures no one, reveals only the innumerable anomalies with which our whole position as the dominant power in India is surrounded; and that the Bill itself exposes that, so far from race disqualifications in judicial administration being abolished, this very evil becomes very greatly intensified and accentuated by the exclusion from the power, which it is proposed to assign to a few, of a large body of equally competent and meritorious public servants. The fact is that, with whatever sincerity finality may be pleaded, finality in such legislation is impossible if once the principle is yielded; and the Lieutenant Governor is inclined to suspect that very much of the vehemence of the agitation on both sides of the dispute arises from the knowledge that such is the case. The single question, then, is whether the time has come for the concession of the principle in any form and subject to any modifications of the Bill, and for the reasons to be immediately given, the Lieutenant Governor is certainly of opinion that it has not.

6. It has been put forward, not so much from any concession to popular sentiment in the matter as from the necessities of the case, that with the abandonment of much which now appears in the Bill as regards cantonment magistrates, assistant commissioners, and statutory civilians, the power to try European British subjects should be extended only to the covenanted native civilians who have entered the service by competition, and that the power should be restricted to such officers as district magistrates and district judges by virtue of their office. In presence of the extreme animosities which the question has excited, this seems rather a small object to be attained, and the descent from the original proposal suggests something of the trivial results of great efforts. In the first place, it may be noticed that such an issue would prospectively affect just nine individuals in India, and most of these at a distant period. Immediately, it would confer a privilege (if so it may be called) upon three native gentlemen, two in Lower Bengal and one in Bombay—and if legislation is justifiable only where a clear case is made out for recourse to it, the condition seems hardly to be fulfilled in this instance. But the objection seems to be valid still further, because of the two native gentlemen whom the Lieutenant Governor has had recently the pleasure of appointing to districts, one at least will, in all probability, be relieved of his charge in the course of next cold season by the return from furlough of senior officers, and the Bill, by the time it became law, would affect only the one native civilian in the Bombay Presidency, and possibly one in Bengal. It cannot be pretended, then, that there is any urgency for the legislation; or in the constitution of the office of the magistrate and collector of a district in Bengal is there any necessity for it. It may be asserted beyond contradiction that from the beginning of the year to the end a magistrate of a district rarely, if ever, thinks of dealing with criminal cases. He has the full power to do so; but his avocations are so numerous, and his responsibilities so various in the general supervision of district administration, and in the particular charge which he retains in his own hands in connection with revenue and fiscal matters, that he would never have the leisure to attend to work on the magisterial side, and as a consequence, the whole of this falls, by a necessary division of labour, and in the regular course of procedure, to the joint magistrate of the district and his native subordinates in that line. Mr. Romesh Chunder Dutt is now officiating as magistrate and collector of the Backergunge district. The Lieutenant Governor ventures to say that, with the extremely heavy revenue work of that district, he has no time, and probably, has no inclination, to touch any work in the criminal courts; and if any case arose there in which a European was involved, the parties would not be put, as Mr. Romesh Chunder Dutt asserts, to "the hardship and inconvenience of travelling to a different district," but would find, in the European joint magistrate on the spot, an officer not only competent to deal with the case, but one who, in the ordinary course of business, would have to deal with it without the necessity of any interference from his superior. This is not always the case; there are some districts in Bengal where joint magistrates are not permanently stationed, but in such places not unfrequently there are European officers of the Uncovenanted Service, who, as the law now stands, can exercise jurisdiction over European British subjects. The argument based on "administrative inconvenience" is utterly untenable in the present constitution of the Civil Service; and if it is untenable in Bengal, where six out of the nine native covenanted civilians are employed, it can scarcely affect any other administration in the country. The consensus of opinion received from different provinces is very much invalidated by the fact that there is not a single member of the Native Covenanted Service, who has entered it by competition, in Madras, the Punjab, the Central Provinces, Burmah, Assam, Scinde, or Coorg. There are two such officers in the Bombay Presidency; one, a very junior officer, under the Government of the North Western Provinces; and six in Lower Bengal. There is scarcely an exception in the support given to the irrelevancy of the "administrative inconvenience" theory among all the reports from local officers. At the present moment there are forty-five districts under the Bengal Government. At the same time there are two native civilians for whom, as magistrates in charge of districts, immediate provision has to be made; and the contingency may arise of a third being appointed in the course of next year to a civil and sessions judgeship. Executive arrangements will, it is obvious, quite easily provide, without detriment to the public interests or to the personal claims of these native officers, either that they should be in charge of districts where there are no Europeans, or, as regards the magistrates, that they should be in charge of districts where the presence of a European joint magistrate, or of a European deputy magistrate with full powers, would prevent any kind of inconvenience. Even if the time ever arrives when one-sixth of the magistracy of this province is in the hands of natives—though that is quite a different thing from one-sixth of the covenanted appointments being filled by natives, and is in itself very improbable—there could be no difficulty in carrying on the administration of criminal justice without any change in the law; but as a question of very remote concern, it is scarcely necessary to dwell upon the requirements of very distant circumstances.

7. The Lieut. Governor would have been glad if he could have stopped here. He is ready to admit that if everything which he has already urged against the Bill was conceded, but the competency of a native magistrate to exercise jurisdiction in European cases was admitted, the proposal for the present modification of the Criminal Procedure Code would render the position of the advocates of the Bill not unassailable, because many political considerations would still affect the issue, but much stronger than it is now. But the question has to be met whether the legislation contemplated is justified by the fitness of the native judiciary for the powers which it is proposed to confer upon them, and in the Lieutenant Governor's judgment the answer must be in the negative. He comes here to that part in the discussion which, as contained in the statement of objects and reasons appended to the Bill, represents the aim of it to be to secure the fair and impartial administration of justice, and to the observations of the honourable member who introduced the Bill that these particular cases against Europeans were in India admittedly few and exceptionally troublesome. Now, the Lieutenant Governor has little sympathy with that section of the opponents of the measure which represents the possibility of unrighteous judgments leading to severe and unjustifiable sentences at the hands of native magistrates, who are supposed to be a corrupt body, biased against the European. If bias there might be in critical cases, there is little justification for any apprehensions from excessive punishments. If we have taught the natives anything, we have taught them to respect the purity of judicial administration, and in the Lieutenant Governor's opinion, in these days of railways and telegraphs no wilful injustice could occur in the remotest corners of the country without being at once brought to light and remedied. Apart, however, from the main objection, which the Lieutenant Governor will presently avert to, there are other drawbacks which must be noticed. The surroundings of a Mofussil magistrate's court are not exactly the surroundings of a court at Westminster, or of the High Court in Calcutta. An Englishman, much more an Englishwoman, summoned to such a court (frequently, as evidence shows, on a false charge) has to undergo many indignities which a European officer can at once control and check, but which in a court presided over by a native, find free course amidst a sympathetic audience. There is no exaggeration in this, as most persons who have had to deal with such cases can testify; and the absolute distrust which the European in the interior has of such courts arises not so much from any positive want of confidence in the magistrate, if left to himself, as from the atmosphere of perjury, forgery, and intrigue, which is about him and around him. Beyond this, however, the Lieutenant Governor is bound to say that there is a much greater risk of the failure of justice from a want of nerve in the native to deal in the presence of public excitement with the kind of "troublesome cases" to which these papers refer. The experience of every officer in the country will supply illustrations in which this independent force of character has been found wanting in the natives, and the reports before Government show innumerable cases in which a constitutional timidity has led natives to shirk duty because it is difficult. In judicial trials it is a much easier thing to acquit, when the acquittal terminates all inquiry and disposes of a serious embarrassment, than to convict and punish in complicated cases against the resolute determination of a violent Englishman, backed by a strong local opinion in his favour. The Lieutenant Governor would ask if any head of an administration in India would place a native officer in independent charge of a frontier district. A Bengali in such a position, at any rate, might know all our Criminal Codes by heart, and be animated by the strictest desire to apply the law of evidence, and yet would certainly fail if a crisis impended from a sudden irruption of frontier tribes. In the recent discussions about appellate benches, one of the earliest, and, as it appears to the Lieutenant Governor, the simplest methods suggested for limiting petty appeals was to constitute at capital stations a bench composed of the European and first subordinate judge to finally dispose of all such cases, and yet the objection came from the most competent judges of native character—the natives themselves—that on such a tribunal the native judge could exercise no independence. A good deal has recently been heard of local self-government schemes, in which the presence or absence of the magistrate of the district as president of the committee is considered a very material point; but the argument on which the natives' objection is based is that the presence of even a single official on a committee would stop discussion, would paralyse the action of the native members, and would imperil the object for which the scheme has been introduced. There is probably much more than this dislike of control, which repudiates the co-operation of English officers in the prosecution of a great reform; but, taking their own admissions, there can, in the Lieutenant Governor's opinion, be scarcely a stronger argument for the unfitness of natives to carry on such a measure alone than the incapacity which they allege in the presence of the European. These may not be all exactly apposite illustrations to the position of a magistrate discharging judicial functions; but they indicate what many passages in the report before Government describe, and what any practical experience of the country confirms, that the quality of courage, whether moral or physical, is not among the virtues of the people with whom we have to deal in Bengal. The disqualification referred to is further evidenced by the notorious fact, common to every district, that even native litigants in emergent and difficult cases will ask for the trial of their suits by an English tribunal. It can scarcely be a matter of surprise that what is an object of distrust to the natives themselves should be an object of distrust to Europeans.

8. The Government of India will scarcely need a more convincing proof of the unqualified repugnance which the European community throughout India entertain towards this Bill than the general reprobation of it which public opinion in various forms has expressed. The strong feelings which the measure has evoked here, it is to be regretted, found not unfrequent expression in unnecessary bitterness and hostility towards Government. The Lieutenant Governor would fain hope that this excess of feeling in the matter will not influence the judgment which is to decide the fate of the Bill. If he urges himself its withdrawal, it is in the conviction that it is not necessary for the judicial work of the country, and that it takes away a privilege which Englishmen in India very highly value. In asking for the retention of that privilege, they ask for only what has been theirs since British courts of criminal jurisdiction were established in the country, and they ask it in no derogation of the claims of the natives, who, on their own side, enjoy privileges which, if the question of an impartial administration of justice is concerned, affect it much more seriously than the concession in favour of some half dozen native magistrates. The political issues are, of course, of much wider consequence. "The very bad thing about the Bill is its principle"—the principle, that is, that by a stroke of the pen we are to establish equality, ignoring race distinctions, among a people who repudiate the idea in their intercourses with each other with the utmost scorn and aversion. Our thoughts are not their thoughts, nor are their ways our ways; and it has been quite justly pointed out that as long as there is such a wide divergence between Englishmen and natives, as regards moral standards, social customs, and political status, any attempt to remove judicial disqualifications must be as dangerous as it is premature. They will not be removed, at least, by legislative enactment. "Naturam expellas furca, tamen usque recurret." It will recur in hostility, and scandals, and contentions, whenever a serious case arises in which Englishmen are involved before native courts, and the result must be continuous agitation. Be it privilege or prejudice which the Englishman asserts here, there can be no question that among them the bare proposal to withdraw it has excited a fiercer and more perilous conflict races than was witnessed after the Mutiny of 1857; and so the work of twenty-six years, in which every true Englishman and native has welcomed the growth of a stronger mutual regard and toleration for each other, and in which a spirit of charity and forbearance was winning its way to a better understanding of each other's wants, has to be begun over again. It is the Lieutenant Governor's hope that the work may be accelerated by the abandonment of a measure which should never have been introduced, for its very abandonment will contribute, more than anything else, to the right union between all classes of Her Majesty's subjects in India, in advancing, through the social reforms which are before us, our common interests in this great Empire.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

F. B. PEACOCK, Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

The following is the report from the Government of Madras:—
Letter from the Chief Secretary to the Government of Fort St. George to the Secretary to the Government of India, Legislative Department.

Sir,—I am now directed to submit, for the information of the Government of India, copy of the opinions of the Honourable the Advocate General, certain selected district officers and native gentlemen, on the provisions of the Bill which accompanied your letter of March 17 last, No. 23 C. The High Court has not yet furnished its opinion.

2. The present Bill, his Excellency in Council remarks, goes beyond the change that was proposed by the late Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, about which the Government of Madras was consulted, and which that Government approved (the two Civil members of Council dissenting), as expressed in my letter and its enclosures under date June 8 last year. To withdraw the Bill altogether, in deference to the opposition it has evoked in certain quarters, would, in the judgment of his Excellency in Council, be a grave political error; but he is of opinion that jurisdiction over European British subjects should be entrusted only to covenanted native civilians—i.e., those who enter the service after a competitive examination conducted in England.

3. I am to enclose a minute recorded by the Right Hon. the Governor and one by his Excellency the Commander in Chief.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

C. G. MASTER, Chief Secretary.

Ootacamund, June 13.

The minute of the Governor, Mr. Grant Duff, follows those of other officials of his Presidency, and refers to their views:—

Minute by the Right Hon. the President, dated May 31st, 1883.

I do not believe that the passing into law of Mr. Ilbert's much-abused Bill would cause one anna of British capital to be removed from India—nay, I feel persuaded that five years hence the whole opposition to it would be forgotten, and that everything would go on as it has done for years.

2. What is meant by such phrases as those used by Mr. Logan about alienating the goodwill of the European community? How could the European community remain permanently alienated from that Government whose existence and overwhelming strength alone make the presence of the European community in this country possible?

3. I agree with Mr. Stokes in considering that the much-discussed measure is perfectly "innocuous." Half the clamour raised against it has proceeded from persons who do not know the law under which they are living, and who will read with surprise Mr. Webster's clear and telling exposition of that law.

4. It does not follow, however, that because a Bill is innocuous it ought to be passed.

5. To withdraw it altogether would be, as it seems to me, a grave political error—one of the gravest that has been made in the domestic politics of India for many years. To do so would be to give up to irresponsible people the government of a country, which should remain, where the law has placed it, in the hands of the Viceroy and his Council under the general superintendence of the Secretary of State and his Council.

6. When, however, this and other Governments were consulted a year ago they were not consulted about what has since been known as "Mr. Ilbert's Bill," but about a very different proposition.

7. Why should not the change be confined, as was proposed at that time, to covenanted native civilians only?

8. I daresay the Government of India had very good reasons for enlarging the scope of the suggested change. But these reasons cannot have been such as to demand urgency.

9. Would it not be wise to be satisfied with [extending the proposed privileges to covenanted native civilians? It is idle to maintain that they have not had greater advantages than the nominated native civilians. In process of time we shall see whether the former are, as many think they will be, far superior in efficiency to the latter, or whether on the other hand, these show themselves the equals of their more highly-educated brethren.

10. Alors comme alors! This is not a country in which it is well to take very long views. Let us make those changes based upon our experience here and elsewhere, which, we feel persuaded, will produce pretty soon good effects, and let us give all reasonable satisfaction to the reasonable wishes of the people as brought before us by their authoritative spokesmen, up and down the land; but let us not be led to move at all quicker than we otherwise should, with a view to anticipate demands which may some day be made, and which it will be for our successors to grant or refuse.

11. I have no sympathy, nor, indeed, any toleration, for the distinction which I see drawn in one of the papers read above between what is theoretically right and practically right. If a thing is practically wrong it must be theoretically wrong, the theory being based usually on imperfectly apprehended facts.

12. I hold, however, that we have sufficient facts at our command to be certain that the covenanted native civilians will not abuse the powers to be entrusted to them, if the view which was taken by the majority of the Madras Government in May, 1882, finds favour with the Viceroy and his advisers. My personal impression is that the further changes suggested would do no sort of harm, but I should prefer to see one step made at a time.

13. I shall especially rejoice if this view is generally supported by my honourable colleagues, as I hope it may be, and if it enables the Madras Government to give, as it happily usually does give, after full discussion, a unanimous opinion.

May 31.

M. E. GRANT DUFF.

THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF ASSAM.

From C. J. Lyall, Esq., C.I.E., officiating secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Assam, to the secretary to the Government of India, Legislative Department.

Shillong, June 19, 1883.

Judicial Department.

Sir,—On receipt of your Circular, No. 30 C., dated March 17, 1883, copies of the Bill to amend the Criminal Procedure Code were forwarded to the judges of the Assam Valley and Sylhet, and to all deputy commissioners of the province, with a circular letter, a copy of which is enclosed. The replies of all officers thus consulted have now been received, and I am desirous to submit copies of them to the Government of India, together with an expression of the Chief Commissioner's opinion regarding the Bill.

2. The provincial officers are, it will be found, in every case opposed to the Bill, and unanimously recommend its withdrawal. As their replies will, no doubt, be perused in their entirety, it is not necessary to enter on an elaborate summary of their contents, but it will be convenient to indicate as briefly as possible the nature of the argument recorded.

(1) Mr. Ward, commissioner and judge of the Assam Valley districts, would not have opposed the conferment of the powers of justice of the peace on native covenanted civilians when they rose to the rank of district magistrate or judge, and does not think such a proposal would have excited much opposition at first, though it cannot be adopted now in the present state of public feeling. But he objects to the Bill on the ground that the privilege hitherto enjoyed and highly valued by Europeans should not be taken away without grave reason, whereas no serious inconvenience can be alleged to arise anywhere from the present state of the law, and no inconvenience at all is felt in Assam. He holds that no strong native feeling exists on the subject, outside the native official class, and they have no reason to feel slighted; and, further, he objects to the power given to Local Governments to appoint, because it would be exercised in very different ways—sparsely here, liberally there.

(2) Mr. Muspratt, judge of Sylhet, opposes the Bill on the grounds—(a) that in removing one anomaly it creates another by its circumscribed application to particular classes, and its disqualification of European deputy magistrates and non-officials; (b) that Europeans, who are the persons most affected, are convinced that they would not get justice from natives, and their feelings should be respected; (c) that it is inopportune in time, because of the mental disturbance caused by the local self-government scheme, and other important measures now pending, and because the European and native races are not yet amalgamated in feeling or on a par in intelligence.

(3) Mr. Johnson, deputy commissioner of Sylhet, objects both to the details of the Bill—i.e., the distinction drawn between covenanted and other classes, and the disqualification of European uncovenanted officers, and to its principles on the ground that race distinctions cannot be ignored, and that the conquered cannot love the conquering race. He considers the arguments for and against equally feeble, and that being so, thinks the Bill should be withdrawn.

(4) Mr. Wight, deputy commissioner of Cachar, holds that the powers of a justice of the peace might gracefully be given to covenanted civilians and to any native who had reached the grade of district magistrate, but that it would be inopportune to do so now; that all natives other than these are unfit by prejudice and want of education to try Europeans; that it would be inexpedient to bring European ladies into the court of a native magistrate, either as witnesses or otherwise; that native magistrates do not wish for these powers, and would be afraid to convict Europeans if they had to try them, so that the result of the measure would not tend towards justice: that no administrative difficulty is caused by the present law; and that an anomaly is not necessarily objectionable in India, which swarms with anomalies.

(5) Mr. Driberg, deputy commissioner of Goalpara, thinks the Bill good in principle, but desires its withdrawal on account of the hostility with which it has been greeted.

(6) Mr. Campbell, deputy commissioner of Kamrup, holds that there are no sufficient grounds for introducing the Bill, which is met by universal hostility; and that the privileges of Europeans should be respected as much as if they were Hindoos or Mahomedans, who would resent the withdrawal of any of their present privileges.

(7) Mr. Williams, deputy commissioner of Darrang, objects to the conferment of the powers on classes (b), (c), and (d) of the Bill, but not to their conferment on class (a), at any rate as far as the persons hitherto appointed to that class are concerned. But he thinks the Bill, generally speaking, to be unnecessary and bad, and as it is bitterly opposed, he recommends its withdrawal.

(8) Colonel Lamb, deputy commissioner of Nowgong, thinks the hostile tone of the native press proves that the class to whom the new powers would be given are not fit to receive them; that Europeans would be overwhelmed with false accusations; and that it does not follow that because natives have been found able to try natives, they should be able to try Europeans.

(9) Colonel Campbell, deputy commissioner of Sibsagar, holds that a native magistrate cannot understand the feelings, or in many cases the speech, of Europeans, and that Europeans would be worried by false cases. Race distinctions cannot be ignored as long as they exist.

(10) Major Peet, deputy commissioner of Lakhimpur, is opposed to the whole line of policy of which the Bill is a part—i.e., the tendency to put the races on an equality by levelling up or levelling down; and further holds that, whether bad or good, the Bill should be abandoned on account of the unprecipitated excitement it has awakened.

(11) Mr. McCabe, deputy commissioner, Naga Hills, approves only the extension of powers to class (a) of the Bill. He objects to it as unimportant, and states that non-official Europeans feel hostile to natives, and think all native magistrates dishonest.

(12) Colonel Clarke, deputy commissioner, Khasi and Jaintia Hills, thinks the Bill impolitic and unnecessary. Anomalies must exist in India; and this one can only be remedied some time hence, when the two races have been amalgamated in thought and feeling.

(13) Captain Maxwell, deputy commissioner, Garo Hills, opposes the Bill on the ground that Englishmen are better capable than natives of judging Europeans, and this is a substitution of the worse for the worse for the better. He thinks that Europeans will not, after the agitation of the last few months, submit to be tried by natives.

3. These replies are written with the frankness and independence which the Chief Commissioner anticipated, and which become the character of the gentlemen who have written. Much as he disagrees with some of the opinions, the Chief Commissioner would not have wished them to be in any respect modified, or to be anything but the genuine expression of the views of the writers; and he is satisfied that the Government of India will share this feeling. Something has been said in the course of the controversy which has raged over the Bill, about the subservience of Government officers to the known wishes of the head of the Government. Mr. Elliott is glad to record his belief that he has not an officer serving under him who, when asked for his opinion on any subject, would not give free and unbiased expression to it regardless of the views entertained, or supposed to be entertained, by a higher authority; and who, if that opinion was overruled and the question decided against him, would not loyally and cheerfully carry out the orders he might receive.

4. I am now to submit the Chief Commissioner's own opinion about the Bill.

5. First, with regard to the details of the Bill. It will be remembered that the proposal originally circulated was to give the power of trying European British subjects to covenanted native civilians, either before or when they have attained the position of a district magistrate or judge; and Mr. Elliott, in my reply, recommended that such power should be given to native covenanted civil servants on the same terms as to their English compeers, and to statutory native civilians when they had attained the rank of district magistrate or judge, but dissuaded the Government from abolishing altogether the race-distinction between European and native magistrates, as a step for which the time is not yet ripe. The Bill has gone far beyond that recommendation. It would make it possible for statutory native civilians to try European British subjects when they have attained the powers of a first-class magistrate, and it would give the same authority to native assistant commissioners in non-regulation provinces. (I omit all mention of cantonment magistrates, because there is no probability of a native cantonment magistrate ever being appointed except as a coadjutor to a European cantonment magistrate; in which case the latter, and not the former, would receive the powers of a justice of the peace.) The Bill further disqualifies European non-officials and uncovenanted European officials from receiving these powers. Mr. Elliott could not support any of these modifications. In the case of the statutory native civilian he does not think that the test of having received the powers of a first-class magistrate is sufficient; these powers are ordinarily given after a comparatively short term of service, and an officer's worth hardly begins to be known till it is seen how he exercises them. A much longer and severer test should be applied before powers are given, the misuse of which would cause so serious a scandal and would discredit the class to which such an officer belongs; and Mr. Elliott would certainly postpone their conferment till the Local Government, by appointing the civilian to the post of district magistrate or judge, had asserted its complete confidence in his capacity, honesty, and discretion. Again, with regard to native assistant commissioners, there are none in Assam; but from his acquaintance with some of those in Berar and Mysore, the Chief Commissioner has come to the conclusion that the same rule should apply to them as to the statutory civilians, and that they should not receive powers to try European British subjects unless the Government has a sufficiently high opinion of them to appoint them deputy commissioners of districts. Lastly, with regard to the disqualification of European extra assistants and deputy magistrates, Mr. Elliott would regret to see such a change. There are five such officers in this province who have powers of a justice of the peace, and they have exercised the powers with credit and discretion. It would be an administrative inconvenience if, for the sake of a scientific classification, such officers were debarred in future from exercising these powers.

6. If, therefore, in May, 1882, the Chief Commissioner had had this Bill before him, he would have been obliged to dissent from the details to which exception has been taken; he would have recommended the omission from the statement of objects and reasons of the passage about removing at once and completed every judicial disqualification which is based merely on race distinctions; but he would have advised that, if the power of trying European British subjects were confined to natives being—(a)—Covenanted civilians invested with the powers of a first-class magistrate, (b) Statutory civilians appointed to be district magistrates or judges, the Bill so amended should pass into law. Many things have happened since May, 1882, and in the face of those events it does not necessarily follow that the same advice should be given now which would have been given then.

7. It will be in the recollection of the Government of India that the Chief Commissioner, in May, 1882, drew attention to the race antagonism and to the prejudice which is still felt by non-official Europeans against native magistrates, but expressed his belief that the prejudice was dying out, and that the measure then under discussion would not excite any great opposition. He admits now that he was mistaken in his prognostication, and that the feelings of mutual distrust appear to be as active as ever. Whether the storm of hostility with which the Bill has been met is entirely due to the Bill itself, or whether any such hostility would have been awakened had the Bill been confined to the provisions previously circulated to Local Governments, is open to question. But whatever may have been the origin of the excitement, there can be little doubt that the opposition now embraces all and every provision of the Bill, and that no compromise, such as a return to the proposals originally circulated, would satisfy the European public or lead them to look on the Bill with favour.

8. The question which the Government of India have to decide is, how much weight should be attributed to this opposition, and how far they would be justified in compelling one section of the community to submit to an enactment which they vehemently dislike, for the sake of improving the administration or raising the status of another section. And, in deciding this question, they must take into consideration, not only the arguments for and against the Bill, but also the weight and volume of the proposition and its possible effects on the course of Government.

9. As to the arguments against the Bill, Mr. Elliott holds that they are for the most part based on an inaccurate appreciation of the facts, and are tinged by prejudice rather than by reason. He repudiates altogether the assertion that natives of the class who would be selected for such office are unfit, by reason of the difference of race, to understand the motives or arguments of an accused person of European birth, or that there is the slightest reasonable probability of their misusing their power through malice. The whole history of the working of the Civil Courts in Assam seems to him a refutation of such arguments. These Courts have largely to deal with the interests and quarrels of European tea-planters and landowners; they are resorted to with no apparent disinclination; the results of appeals from their decisions show that the native judges of these Courts exercise their functions, and hold the balance between European and native, with discretion and justice. No doubt a Civil Court has not the same powers over the person as a Criminal Court; it cannot order immediate arrest; the consequences of a miscarriage of justice in it are not so serious to the individual as they would be in a Criminal Court. But still the powers of a Civil Court are considerable. It can mulct a man of his property; it can brand him as untruthful and dishonest; it can commit him for contempt of court or imprison him for insolvency. If, then, there are no complaints about the conduct of these Civil Courts, but the comparatively inferior native officials who preside over them are admittedly efficient and independent, it is not reasonable to suppose that the few men who might be selected from these on account of their special ability and high character would, when sitting in a Criminal Court, misconduct themselves in cases where Europeans are concerned. It seems to the Chief Commissioner that the matters which come up for decision in a Civil Court, such as questions of trading custom, of bonds, of loans, and of contracts are, as a rule, more intricate, and require more knowledge of the habits and feelings of the litigant class than the questions which are raised in a criminal trial; and, therefore, the whole series of objections which are based on the supposed inferior ability of native magistrates to try such cases seem to Mr. Elliott to be wholly mistaken. He does not accept as probable the idea that Criminal Courts would be flooded with false charges, when Civil Courts are not so flooded. Indeed, he has no hesitation in adopting the opinion expressed by Mr. Johnson—that the decisions of an able and experienced native magistrate would probably be much more sound and accurate than those of a young English civilian during the first few years of his service in the country.

10. But though the arguments against the Bill seem weak, there remains the weight and volume of the opposition to it, and that appears to Mr. Elliott a much more serious matter. There is probably no province in India in which it is as serious as in Assam. There are, perhaps, more European settlers in Bengal (outside of Calcutta) than in Assam, but they bear a smaller proportion to the mass of the population, and their interests, important as they are, are rivalled or overshadowed by other interests. In Assam they form a larger number, relatively to the population, than in any other part of India, and their interest in the country is more influential and important than the interest of any other class. They are the one intelligent, energetic, improving class in the province; they are the natural allies and assistants of the district officers; and any event which should set them in determined opposition to the Government would be in a high degree disastrous. The deputy commissioner, who should be on bad terms with his tea-planters, would probably deserve to be condemned for want of tact and managing power, and would find himself hampered at every turn, in court and out of court. Already since this Bill was introduced, the Chief Commissioner has painfully felt the estrangement it has produced, and the delay it has caused in carrying out useful reforms and improvements where in progress. He thinks, therefore, that it would require a very strong case to justify any enactment which should exacerbate and perpetuate the alienation which at present exists.

11. No such case can, in his opinion, be made out for the Bill under discussion. The argument from administrative inconvenience is allowed to be a weak one; it does not exist in Assam at all, and nowhere can it become serious for several years. The Chief Commissioner's view is that the Bill, if modified as he has suggested, is a good one, and one which it was right to introduce; but that it is not one of much practical importance, and events have shown that it had better be withdrawn. The step was a step in advance, but not a great one; and it is not worth while to take it when we see the injurious effects which it has produced, and is likely to go on producing, in other unexpected directions.

12. This recommendation to abandon the Bill is not made without regret, for the necessity of making any concession to overpowering hostility—any retreat in the course of policy which has hitherto been a continuous and successful advance—is a regrettable incident. But the Chief Commissioner feels that much larger issues are at stake than the success or failure of this particular Bill. The most painful part to him in all this bitter ebullition of feeling has been the conviction that it has not been evoked by the Bill alone, but is the expression of a determined hostility on the part of non-official Europeans to the general scheme of raising the natives of India to a political equality with ourselves, and to a fair share in the government of the country. He fears that it is the principle of local self-government that is being struck at under the guise of the "Ilbert Bill;" and if that is so, it is a cause for poignant regret that any provisions in the Bill should have been so drawn as to awaken opposition to the principle on which the morality of our tenure of the government of India is based. Mr. Elliott believes he is in harmony with the feelings of most of his district officers when he declares that, in recommending the abandonment of this Bill, he does not mean that the Government of India should in the smallest degree retreat from the general lines of policy on which the Bill was based. No one can hold more emphatically than he that our raison d'être in India rests on the gradual elevation of the natives of the country to share its government with us, and to take a larger and still larger share in that government as time goes on. He has no sympathy with the argument about the conquering and the conquered race; no permanent government can possibly rest on such a basis. If the conquest of India was guided by Providence for the good of the country, it can only have been in order that we might introduce a system of government which shall by degrees obliterate the memories of the conquest. The only postulate is that reforms should be gradual and tentative, and that nothing should be done which, on a general survey of the whole, seems likely to produce more harm than good. It is Mr. Elliott's opinion that the measure under discussion will, on the whole, produce more harm than good, and he advises its withdrawal. He has seen, during his service in India, many measures of reform taken, and a general advance all along the line. In every case these measures have been successful, and the worst thing that could be said of them is that they might have been stronger, or have been taken earlier. It need be no cause of shame to the Government of India to admit that one step in advance has been proposed too soon, and should be receded from; nor need it be taken as an indication of any change in the general policy, or any relaxation of the desire to govern the country through and for the people of the country, as soon as it can be safely and conveniently done. —I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

C. J. LYALL, Officiating Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Assam.

THE COMMISSIONER OF ASSAM VALLEY DISTRICTS.

From W. E. Ward, Esq., Commissioner, Assam Valley Districts, to the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner, Assam.

I have the honour to reply to your circular letter No. 21, dated the 5th April, 1883, in which my opinion is called for upon the proposed amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code.

2. It is difficult to say anything on this subject which has not been said before by others whose opinions are entitled to more weight than any that I can give; but, as I am decidedly opposed to the Bill, I think I am bound to state fully the grounds upon which my opposition is based.

3. The effect of the proposed amendment if carried, may be stated thus. By the law as it now stands, no Mofussil Magistrate or Judge, who is not himself a European British subject, can be appointed a Justice of the Peace; and no one but a Justice of the Peace can try a European British subject on a criminal charge. In other words, no one but a European British subject can try a European British subject on a criminal charge. The Bill proposes—(1) to give Local Governments the power, if they think fit, to appoint any covenanted civilian, assistant commissioner or cantonment magistrate, who has first-class magistrate's powers, to be a justice of the peace without any regard to their nationality; (2) to make all sessions judges and district magistrates ex officio justices of the peace, whether European British subjects or not, and without regard to their fitness to try European British subjects.

All native sessions judges, therefore, and native district magistrates ex officio, as well as all covenanted civilians, assistant commissioners, and cantonment magistrates, who have first class powers, and whom the Local Governments think fit to appoint Justices of the Peace, will have the following powers conferred upon them with respect to the trial of European British subjects, over whom hitherto they have exercised no jurisdiction whatever:—

(a) If a judge, the accused may be sentenced to one year's imprisonment or fine, or both.

(b) If a district magistrate or mofussil magistrate of the first class, the accused can be sentenced to three months' imprisonment or Rs.100 fine, or both.

4. It is scarcely necessary for me to refer to the strong European public feeling which has been excited all over India, and in this province in particular, against this proposed change in the law; and, although I by no means adopt the view that, in India, Government measures should be made subservient to public feeling, I think it must be admitted that the European public have, in the present instance, some ground for alarm. I would recommend, therefore, that, in deference to the strong and not altogether unreasonable feeling that exists against the Bill, it should not be proceeded with, at any rate in its present shape, unless it can be shown that strong administrative grounds exist for doing so.

5. With reference to the question of administrative necessity as a ground for proceeding with the Bill, I do not think it can be said that any such necessity at present exists in any part of India. It certainly does not exist in this province. What inconveniences may arise twenty years hence may be considered when they do arise, but I do not think we need legislate now for possible inconveniences that may arise in the next generation.

The sole question to be considered now should be whether, having regard to public feeling on the subject, any such serious inconvenience exists at present, or is likely to arise in the next four or five years, from the present state of the law as would justify the Legislature in altering the law, I think it cannot be disputed that this question must be answered in the negative. In the first place, it will be a long time before any appreciable number of natives will have risen to be district magistrates or sessions judges; secondly, I do not anticipate any appreciable inconvenience even when the maximum proportion of one-sixth of the Civil Service is composed of natives; for, long before that maximum is reached, it must be borne in mind that our communications throughout India will be considerably improved, and thus the inconveniences to parties and witnesses arising out of transfers of cases from one district to another will be considerably lessened. It is, moreover, very seldom that a Mofussil judge is called upon to try a European (I have had only one such case in this division during the seven years I have been here); and, with regard to district magistrates, it can always be arranged that, where the district magistrate is a native, the joint magistrate or senior assistant commissioner at the headquarters of the district shall be a European British subject and a justice of the peace with first-class powers. In cases, therefore, against European British subjects with which a magistrate is competent to deal, there is no reason to anticipate that any inconvenience whatever to witnesses and parties will ever arise by maintaining the law as it now stands. Thus the inconveniences, which I understand it is one of the objects of the Bill to remove, seem to me to be inappreciable, and do not, I think, afford sufficient ground for proceeding with the Bill in face of the very strong public feeling which has been excited against it.

6. In speaking of public feeling, I refer, of course, solely to European public feeling. Native feeling I leave altogether out of consideration, because I do not think in a matter of this kind it has any claim upon our consideration. The mass of the people certainly have no feeling whatever on the subject one way or the other, and with regard to the upper non-official class of natives I do not think there is any ground for supposing that they ever wanted a change in the law until the present Bill was published. Even now they do not pretend that the Bill will do them any good. Many respectable natives are against the proposed change; others only support it because they think it affords another manifestation of the present benevolent policy of Government in granting them extended powers of local self-government. These latter have also taken up the view (which, I think, has rather been suggested to them by the discussions that have taken place on the Bill than by any original feelings entertained by themselves on the subject) that the privilege which the European now enjoys of being tried by his own peers is invidious and casts a stigma on the character and qualifications of native magistrates.

7. This brings me to the feelings of the native official class upon the subject. As regards these, I must say that, if, before the Bill was published, they ever felt (which I very much doubt) the invidiousness of the distinction which prevents their trying Europeans, I cannot understand the feeling. I can conceive nothing more natural than that a European should prefer to be tried by one of his own race. Rightly or wrongly, he distrusts the native magistrate, whether we call the latter a covenanted civilian or by any other name. He has had practically no experience of the covenanted native civilian, still less of the statutory civilian (a native cantonment magistrate has, I understand, never been seen); and, as regards the native assistant commissioners, it cannot, I think, be said that they are entitled as a class to any special confidence on the part of the European public, although no one will deny that there are many able officers to be found belonging to that class. Seeing, then, what European public feeling is in the matter, I cannot understand the desire of any native magistrate or judge which prompts him to move the Government to disregard and crush that feeling. I cannot conceive any native of education and right feeling, or possessed of any pride in his constitution, claiming the right to try a man who with or without reason does not expect justice from him. Indeed, I refuse to believe for a moment that any such native feels in the least degree slighted at the thought that he can only try a man of his own race. It would be as reasonable to suppose that I feel slighted because the Criminal Procedure Code gives a Judge of my experience, with the power to sentence a Native to death subject to confirmation by the High Court, and to transportation without such confirmation, power only to sentence a European British subject to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine. No doubt, there may be a few Native Magistrates whose vanity prompts them to think they should be empowered to try Europeans. The feeling, however, is a bad one; and it is not towards gratifying the vanity of the few that legislation should be directed.

Then, again, I have not yet found any answer to the argument that, in the matter now under discussion, it is not the feelings of the Judge that we should consult, but those of the people whom it is proposed to place under his jurisdiction. I see that one honourable member in the Council of His Excellency the Governor General, replying to this argument, said that he saw no reason why that which did not hurt the feelings of Europeans in Presidency towns should hurt them in the Mofussil; but I would submit that, whether we appreciate or not the reasons on which public feeling is based, we must, when legislating for the good of the people, recognise the fact that the feeling does exist.

and district magistrates whom the Bill declares to be ex officio fit to try Europeans, it is not proposed to give jurisdiction over Europeans to any but selected native magistrates. The Bill, however, gives unlimited discretion to Local Governments to select; and I do not think that public confidence in a magistrate is likely to be enhanced by the fact that a Local Government has selected him; and any Bill which renders it possible for a European to be subjected to the criminal jurisdiction of a native in whom the European public have no confidence is, I think, wrong in principle, and will, I fear, if passed into law, be not only productive of much bad feeling between Europeans and natives all over India, but will probably also lead to many scandalous scenes in courts presided over by native magistrates. It must also be remembered that a Local Government is a very variable abstraction. It possesses no very fixed ideas as to the fitness of persons or things. The head of a Local Government to-day may think that its powers of selection under this Bill ought to be rarely exercised; his successor to-morrow will think that they ought to be rarely withheld. In short the action of Local Governments under the special powers conferred upon them by the Bill will, I am afraid, vary very much according to the individual views of the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Chief Commissioner upon the general question now under discussion. The practical effect of the Bill, therefore, if passed, will simply be to shift the responsibility of deciding the general question from the shoulders of the Government of India to those of the Local Governments. This, I think, the European public are entitled to object to. The subject under discussion is of sufficient importance, I think, to require that the Imperial Legislature shall settle it one way or the other, and not leave it to less responsible shoulders. Moreover, the decision of the general question is one which should affect all European British subjects in India alike, and should not be left to be decided by Local Governments in such a way that the Europeans of one province may find themselves deprived of privileges of which those in a neighbouring province are in full enjoyment.

9. It is unnecessary to go into the question as to whether the European can claim the right to be tried by his own peers; it is sufficient to find that he has enjoyed the privilege of being so tried for many years and in many countries, and that he values that privilege highly. We as rulers, cannot fail to appreciate this feeling, nor can we disregard it, even though we may think that it is based more on sentiment than on reason; or we know well that many of our existing institutions continue to exist mainly by reason of the sentiment which attaches to them. This privilege, then, which the European values so highly, should not, I think, be taken away from him on any other ground than that of administrative necessity. When the matter is looked at in this light, it seems to me that the stigma theory has nothing to support it.

10. Upon the question as to whether native civilians and assistant commissioners can ever be trusted with the powers it is proposed to give them, I do not wish to give any decided opinion. I should be sorry to say that none are to be trusted, and, so long as there are any fit to exercise these powers, it can of course be said that Local Governments may very well be trusted to find out these men. I have myself never yet seen a native covenanted civilian who has been to England, and I have only come across one statutory civilian without seeing any of his work. I am scarcely, therefore, in a position to judge of the powers and qualifications of a native civilian. I would deprecate, however, any a priori theory that supposes that a native who has been to England and competed for the civil service is, by reason of this fact alone, competent to try a European. Much more than this is required before any native can enter into our feelings and motives, and appreciate or even understand our family and social relations. That he does not understand these things no native would, I venture to think, attempt to deny; and I think the European may well ask without being necessarily accused of stigmatising the native character or raising invidious distinctions, "Is any man fit to try me, whose entire habits of life, thoughts, feelings, opinions, are so entirely distinct from my own, and who may therefore frequently be led to pronounce a wrong judgment upon me by reason of his want of sympathy with me or a proper understanding of the real merits of the case against me?" Of course, if the validity of the arguments is admitted with respect to the covenanted civilian proper, it applies with greater force to the statutory civilian and the native assistant commissioner, who has never visited England at all.

11. No doubt, it may be said that the present Bill can do no harm if the number of cases in which a European will be tried by a native will, as is anticipated, be so small; but I think legislative action should have something stronger to support it than the mere allegation that it is harmless. Moreover, I think the Bill, if carried into law, will do much harm; for, as already stated, it will, I have no doubt, produce an amount of bad feeling between natives and Europeans, especially among the lower classes, which it will take many years to eradicate. Nor do I think the fact that the punishing powers of judges and magistrates over Europeans convicted by them of a criminal offence are small any ground for giving those powers. This, of course, is merely another form of the argument that the Bill may be supported on the ground that it can do little or no harm.

12. A good deal has been written and said to the effect that, if the Bill is carried, European capital and enterprise will be driven out of the country, or, any rate, will receive a severe check. I do not believe this for a moment, for the simple reason that cases will, I am sure, whatever happens to this Bill, be exceedingly rare in which a native will ever sit in judgment upon a European; and European enterprise and capital are not so easily frightened from a country where such large profits are to be found as in India.

13. In conclusion, I would only add that, had the Bill confined itself to carrying out what Mr. Gupta originally proposed, namely, that covenanted civilians (excluding the statutory civilian) who rose to the position of a district judge or chief magistrate of a district (deputy commissioner as he is here called) should have ex officio powers to try Europeans, I do not think any one would have seriously objected; and, were it not that the present Bill has excited so much bad feeling, I should have been inclined to propose that it be modified to meet Mr. Gupta's proposal, and nothing more; but, in view of the present state of public feeling, and seeing what little real necessity there is for such a modified Bill, I should prefer seeing the present Bill withdrawn altogether without anything being offered in substitution for it. As an alternative proposal, however, I would suggest that the privilege which the European now enjoys of being tried by his own peers be continued to him, but that he be allowed to waive the privilege and submit himself to the jurisdiction of any native magistrate of the first-class, whether he be a covenanted civilian or assistant commissioner, extra assistant commissioner, honorary magistrate, or deputy or even sub-deputy magistrate. I am quite certain that if a Bill of this kind was passed, many Europeans would, for their own conveniences, waive their privileges in many cases, and assert them only in cases of difficulty or importance. It would be well also if, at the same time, Europeans were, by the amendment of the code, allowed to submit themselves to the jurisdiction of European judges and magistrates in cases which, under the present law, these latter cannot now try. It is a serious thing for a European planter in Assam, and also for witnesses here, to feel that in a certain class of cases they must all, whether the accused or complainant wishes it or not, be sent up for trial and examination to the High Court at Calcutta, because the judge has no power to pass a sentence exceeding one year's imprisonment and fine.

14. I notice that the Bill excludes extra assistant commissioners, the deputy magistrates of Bengal and honorary magistrates, and this, too, whether they be European or native, from being selected by Local Government's as fit to try Europeans. I do not understand why they should be excluded. If it be held that there must be some assistant commissioners with first class magisterial powers who are fit for selection to try Europeans, the same, I think, may certainly be said of any class of magistrates who have first class powers.

THE JUDGE OF SYLHET.

From H. Muspratt, Esq., Judge of Sylhet, to the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner, Assam :—

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Circular No. 21, of 5th ultimo, giving cover to a copy of the Bill to amend the Criminal Procedure Code.

2. I beg to tender my sincere thanks to the Chief Commissioner for permitting me to express my opinion on the said Bill frankly and independently.

3. (1) I think the Bill should never have been drawn up in its present form, as it is very circumscribed in its application, and is totally opposed to the views given in the second ground of Objects and Reasons.

4. (2) I think the Bill was a mistake, as it is proposed to remove an anomaly and to confer new powers on some ten Government officials, without any consideration being given to the feelings of the thousands who will be affected by the amended law.

5. (3) I hold that the Bill has been introduced at a most inopportune time. The minds of the people are in a very unsettled state in consequence of the introduction of local self-government throughout India, by the proposed law of landlord and tenant in Bengal, and by the proposed land regulation in Assam.

6. (4) The proper time has not arrived for introducing a Bill to do away with race distinctions. Very startling changes are proposed before the masses of the native population are sufficiently advanced to understand that the object of the Bill was to raise the status of the Native civilians, and not to lower the status of all European officials, whether covenanted or uncovenanted.

7. With reference to my first ground of objection, I notice the Bill proposes to give jurisdiction over European British subjects to (a) members of the covenanted civil service, (b) members of the native civil service, (c) assistant commissioners, and (d) cantonment magistrates. The Bill thus excludes all the subordinate magistrates, whether European British subjects or Asiatics, as though they were not only inferior in position but also in judicial acumen.

8. It would, I consider, be most unjust to debar European subordinate magistrates altogether from holding jurisdiction over European British subjects. Numbers of those officers have for many years held such power, and no one has ever charged them with acting unjustly when their fellow countrymen have been tried in their courts.

9. It may not be intended to deprive those already entrusted with the powers of justices of the peace; but why, I would ask, should not those that come after them (if be fitted) invested with similar powers? They must surely be quite as experienced, able, and trustworthy as the members of classes (b), (c), and (d).

10. If it is the desire of the Government of India to remove from the code at once, and completely, every judicial disqualification which is based on race-distinctions, why should a new anomaly be created, and the powers already held by a large number of officers be taken away, in order to give more powers to a very small number not holding similar powers outside the Presidency towns?

11. It appears to me that the proposed change in the law would, in a very short time, create many instances of administrative inconvenience, and injured parties would have to travel to the Sadr stations to prosecute petty charges that might, as hitherto, be tried by fully qualified European deputy magistrates at the sub-division.

12. I purpose, in the next place, to consider why (2) the Bill was a mistake.

13. In the statement of objects and reasons it is stated—"It was thought anomalous that natives of India should be deemed incompetent to exercise jurisdiction over European British subjects outside the Presidency towns."

14. It appears to me that the greatest anomaly was in the granting of such powers to natives of India in the Presidency towns. I do not remember to have heard that the appointment of non-Europeans in Calcutta was ever considered a success. No member of the council in the debate on the proposed Bill named any one of them as a proof that the powers granted to natives in Calcutta should be extended to the Moussil.

15. The Government of India calls the proposed change the removal of every judicial disqualification based merely on race-distinctions, and asserts that it is an anomaly that natives of India competent to discharge the highest judicial duties should be incompetent to be justices of the peace. Why, then, would the Government give the powers to natives holding certain posts, and debar others of the same race who have long sat in the courts as magistrates and have earned the confidence of the governors of provinces by their integrity and upright conduct?

16. When the English obtained possession of each portion of the Indian Empire, the courts of the country were found to be so venal and corrupt that it was found imperatively necessary to legislate that European British subjects should only be tried by their fellow countrymen. They have continued to try them. Why, then, should that power now be withheld from them unless they are members of classes a, c, and d?

17. I consider that the distinction raised in the selection of officers to be empowered to try Europeans is a great mistake.

18. Mr. Elliott states in the circular that the proposed Bill has been, and is, vehemently opposed by the influential body of non-official Europeans in the country.

19. I maintain that they have just grounds for their opposition to the Bill, and their assertions clearly prove that the time is not yet arrived for the proposed change.

20. European British subjects are convinced that they should not be tried by natives of India, who do not understand their manners, customs, and feelings; who do not entertain any respect for their own women, and who would prefer to have their women steeped in ignorance.

21. It cannot possibly cast any slur on those native gentlemen who have won high positions in the covenanted and uncovenanted services that they should not be asked or compelled to try charges brought against European British subjects. I have been a member of the Bengal Civil Service for thirty-three years, and I never heard such an assertion made before I read the speech of the honourable Durga Churn Laha.

22. I can point out a stronger anomaly than the one that has led to the introduction of the present Bill, but I do not consider that it imposes any disparagement or casts any slur on me as a judicial officer. The present Deputy Commissioner of Cachar is under eleven years' service, and had not even arrived in the country when I was appointed sessions judge at Cachar; yet he is empowered, under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code, to sit alone to try any offence not punishable with death, while I have to try similar cases with the assistance of assessors.

23. Europeans are truly afraid of being tried in the courts of natives, whose fellow-countrymen daily prove that their chief weapon of offence against a rival or an enemy is to bring against him a false charge backed up by perjured witnesses. Both Hindus and Mohammedans institute false charges, and it is not confined to the poor and ignorant of these two races.

24. In Assam, 2,336 false cases were detected in 1880, and 2,105 in 1881, or nearly ten per cent. of the cases instituted in each year, and over 25 per cent. of the charges brought were rejected. Of persons brought to trial, the numbers acquitted in 1880 and 1881 were respectively 4,862 and 4,956.

25. How, I would ask, can the Government expect that any European (man or woman) would consent to be tried by a court when the prosecutor, witnesses, investigating officer, magistrate, mukhtars, and vakils are all aliens to him or her in race, feelings, and religion, &c.

26. It is very unfortunate that the Government of India did not consult some of the officials who are daily hearing cases, and who could have understood both sides of the question, and would not have treated it as a matter solely of State policy and convenience.

27. This is the first time that the feelings of any class of officials have been consulted. It is a great mistake to pander to such sensitiveness. Government should rather have considered the feelings and antipathies of those who would be affected by the proposed Bill.

28. I cannot but feel that the determined opinion of Government, stated in their objects and reasons, has given rise to much of the strong language used in discussing the proposed changes in the law.

29. I next proceed to consider whether the Bill should have been introduced at the present time, and what effect it is likely to have on the native races in Lower Bengal and Assam.

30. In 1882, the Government of India decided that local self-government should be started throughout the length and breadth of India.

31. It is unnecessary for me to specify what great changes were thus introduced, and how it has given importance to many things, many places, and many people. The majority of the people formerly took no interest in the matter of roads, education, &c.

32. Government are now desirous that the masses should think for themselves on the subject of self-government, and they have been called on to assist in the election of the members of the committees. The laws for carrying out self-government were only under discussion when this amendment of Criminal Procedure was notified.

33. The Code of the Criminal Procedure was passed in March last year and came into force on the 1st of January of the present year. The introduction in February of a radical change in selecting the officers to be appointed to try European British subjects by an amending Bill must arouse feelings in the natives of India that the code contained a very glaring error, which should not have occurred while the code was before the Council of India. They would naturally inquire what changes were proposed; and what must they think of the announcement that Government had determined at once, and completely, to remove from the code every judicial disqualification based merely on race distinctions?

34. The only conclusion they could arrive at would be this, Government have held incorrect views, and have assigned a higher status to European judges and magistrates than they were entitled to hold, and that henceforth those officials were to be reduced to the same level as the native magistrates and judges.

35. The natives of India will learn that the proposed amendments disqualify all uncovenanted European magistrates, and place in their stead certain native officials about whose fitness or abilities very few of them know anything.

36. What, then, can the masses think of the proposed changes, and the hurry with which an amending Bill has been introduced before the Council?

37. This amending Bill, to my mind, strikes a heavy blow at the foundation of the structure of criminal courts in India, and lowers all magistrates and judges in the eyes of the masses. No longer will they respect those officials. The administration of justice will be carried on under considerable difficulties (signs of these are already cropping up), and the hitherto smooth working of the Government officials in their intercourse with the masses of the people will be seriously affected.

38. The people do not feel respect for the civil courts. They pay heavily for the privilege of using them, and they consider that those courts have been created for their convenience, to enable them to recover their rights, and in many cases to injure their enemies.

39. But the criminal courts have been revered, as they are backed up by enormous powers, namely, by the police and by the terrors of the gaols and of transportation across the black waters. It is impossible at the present time to convince a villager that he will get the same justice before a fellow-countryman as before a "sahebth" and until the mass of the people feel assured they will get equal justice before Asiatic and European magistrates, the time has not arrived to introduce the proposed changes into the Code of Criminal Procedure.

40. In the present year, a Bill affecting landlords and tenants in Bengal has been discussed in the Council. It has given rise to very conflicting opinions, and the landlords are as deeply moved by that Bill as the Europeans by this amending Bill. Silhat is convulsed by the proposed Land Regulation for Assam.

41. Heretofore the Government of India have felt their way, and have introduced changes in the law singly and cautiously. But now no less than three laws making vital changes are being started at one time in Lower Bengal and also in Assam.

42. I maintain that the present was a most inopportune time for the introduction of a law that must bring to the surface antipathies that were slumbering, but which might have ceased to exist in process of time.

43. In conclusion, I would most respectfully urge that this amending Bill should be withdrawn, and I sincerely trust that the hostility which it has elicited may be calmed down, and friendly feelings between all classes and races be restored.

THE RESIDENT OF HYDERABAD.

The minutes in which the residents at Hyderabad and Mysore have recorded their opinions upon the Criminal Procedure Bill have much in common. They are both agreed, to begin with, in the great and cardinal point, that each disapproves of the Bill and would recommend absolute withdrawal. But there is a further likeness in the line of argument by which in either case the conclusion has been reached. Mr. Cordery commences with a quotation of the celebrated sentence that the object of the Bill was "to remove from the Code, at once and completely, every judicial disqualification which is based merely on race distinctions." So far as these distinctions are founded on ignorant prejudices, Mr. Cordery agrees that their abolition claims nothing but approval. But if they are the outcome of differences of character, of training, of opportunities, for acquiring knowledge and the like—such distinctions are recognised all the world over, and he does not see how it is possible to abolish them except on paper. The opposition to the Bill proceeds from a deeply seated conviction that native officers have not yet acquired the qualities essential to a fair exercise of the judicial powers which the Bill would entrust to them. Mr. Cordery then passes to an analysis of the grounds that give support to this belief. The qualities requisite in a judge or magistrate are a sufficient knowledge of the character and ways of both parties to the suit, and the possession of the confidence which comes to him from the knowledge, that he is trusted by both sides and occupies a position which precludes the necessity for any sort of self-assertion. Now, the native officer can never have the same experience of Europeans that a European official possesses of natives, nor as he reasonable chance of acquiring it, as in any event the European cases which may be brought before him will be exceedingly few; while the European judicial officer spends the best part of his days in sitting in judgment upon the people of the country. It is in the presidency towns alone that the native officer has any chance of attaining the requisite knowledge, and it is only necessary to bear in mind the importance which the "intention" carries in criminal charges to estimate the necessity of this knowledge, and the reasonableness of misgivings where it is suspected of being absent. As to the quality of confidence or nerve in the judge, Mr. Cordery reckons up the great anxieties which would be felt by a native officer in hearing criminal charges against Europeans, and the pressure he might be subjected to from his own countrymen, as forces which must tell against the efficient administration of justice. Upon other grounds he can see no reason whatever for the change, and while admitting the difficulties of withdrawing the Bill in the face of the present agitation, and admitting, too, the importance of the principle of the advancement of natives, he believes that an acknowledgment of the prematurity of the proposal, coupled with a strong assertion of that principle, would meet the case more satisfactorily than a piece of prospective legislation which would create a bad precedent and satisfy nobody.

THE RESIDENT AT MYSORE AND CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF COORG.

Mr. J. B. Lyall, resident at Mysore and chief commissioner of Coorg, explains that though he is now totally opposed to the Bill, he was not always so. When he was consulted on the measure a year ago, being then financial commissioner of the Punjab, he gave a qualified assent to it, as far as district magistrates and sessions judges were concerned, for reasons of administrative convenience. But now that he has given more serious attention to the Bill, and has seen what there is to be said against it, he is not disposed to go even as far as this. Mr. Lyall has arrived at the opinion that the administrative inconvenience is still in the far distance, and as to the advancement of natives in the public service, he believes that the alteration of the law is more likely to hinder than promote it, both because of the likelihood of some miscarriage of justice and a consequent reaction, and because the Government might be less ready to appoint a native civilian to the post of district magistrate if there was chance of his having to try Europeans. We have already remarked upon the resemblance between Mr. Lyall's minute and that of Mr. Cordery, and the arguments and illustrations by which the former goes on to show that the native official must be a less efficient judge in mixed suits, or in suits entirely between Europeans would be almost a repetition of those which we have summarised above. There is the same contention that the native is placed in such cases, in a very unfavourable position to start with as compared with the European justice. The stronger influences exerted by his countrymen on the one hand, and by the position of the accused on the other, are pointed out with equal earnestness in both. As to the partialities of the English civilian, Mr. Lyall holds that they are oftener with the natives than with the non-official Europeans, whose roughness and want of outward respect for the court seldom creates a favourable predisposition. Like Mr. Cordery again, Mr. Lyall sees no great obstacle to the withdrawal of the Bill in the supposed concession to menace which would be implied thereby. It is only the occasional manner of the opposition, and not the opposition itself, that deserves to be called unreasonable, and he believes that the non-official Europeans are as much alive as any other section in the community to the progress of the natives, and the necessity of recognising it on good occasion, even to the detriment of their own class interests. The native agitation, on the other hand, is, in Mr. Lyall's opinion, confined to the educated, dissatisfied class, who will remain equally ill affected to the Government, whatever concessions are made to them, and whose interest in the Bill is solely derived from the fact that it is unpalatable to Europeans. Although it is difficult for native gentlemen to express an opinion against the Bill at the present time, for fear of being thought indifferent or unpatriotic, Mr. Lyall does not believe that it is popular with them as a rule, and, like every other officer of any experience who has thought it worth while to say so, he believes that the attitude of the masses in the matter is one of absolute indifference.

THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER IN RAJPUTANA.

Colonel Bradford does not think that there is anything invidious in the exemption at present possessed by Europeans in criminal cases, nor does he believe that it has been regarded by the native population as a grievance. On the contrary, he anticipates that many native judicial officers would look upon their new powers as anything but a boon. Even if the Bill were withdrawn now, his opinion is that the counter-agitation among the native minority would very soon be found to subside. Justice would probably be administered equitably enough by the native magistrates in the majority of cases, but there are others, such as those in which religious prejudices are brought into play, in which it would be difficult to put confidence in the impartiality of the most eminent native. As to Rajputana Colonel Bradford shows that the European population consists mostly of railway employees, a class that as a whole is ignorant and prejudiced against the natives, and he fears that a revival of antipathies, such as is likely to be brought about by the Bill, will tend to disturbances. If the Bill is passed at all, he would suggest that it be partially and locally applied, like so many other of the measures of the Government of India; but his final recommendation is that legislation should be postponed.

LONDON PRODUCE MARKETS.—FRIDAY EVENING.—The markets in Mincing-lane have not improved this week, and occasionally, when there has been any pressure to sell on the part of the importers, prices have shown weakness. Beet sugar for prompt shipment and to the end of the year has more than lost the small advance last quoted, but a fair amount of business has been done. Cane-grown sugar continues inactive, but crystallised Demerara at auction to-day met with good competition at firmer rates, limited quantity offered. The tea market remains very dull, and the public sales still chiefly absorb the attention of the trade. Of Indian the catalogues have comprised even a larger supply than during the preceding week, and prices have further given way, the fall in some cases being rather heavy. A considerable quantity is also declared for the ensuing week. No change has occurred in coffee, the tone being flat. Stocks in some of the Continental markets have again increased during September, and the total for Europe is far above the usual average. East Indian growths are depressed, as well as common plantation Ceylon. Colory kinds of the latter are, however, steady. Foreign coffee sells slowly. Rice is excited, and advancing for cargoes to arrive, and extensive transactions have been effected. Colonial cocoa firmer. A public sale of cinnamon is announced for Wednesday next, being out of the regular course. Cassia lignea has declined. Pepper maintains a high value, and white is again dearer. The following are to-day's quotations:—Coffee.—Current qualities plantation Ceylon, 72s. to 79s.; good Channel Rio, afloat, 44s. 6d. to 45s. 6d. per cwt. in bond. Tea.—Common to fair Congou, new crop, 6½d. to 10d.; medium to finest, 11d. to 2s. 4d.; Indian common to good, 6d. to 1s. 6d.; fine and finest, 1s. 9d. to 4s. per lb. in bond. Sugar.—Refining West India, 17s. to 21s.; crystallised Demerara, 27s. 6d. to 30s.; low brown East India, 13s. to 14s. 6d. per cwt., duty free. Black pepper.—Singapore, 6 15-16d. to 7d. per lb. Rice.—Rangoon, to arrive, 8s. 6d. to 9s. per cwt., open charter.

INDIAN ZOEDONE COMPANY.—On the 17th inst. a petition is to be heard for the winding-up of this company, by the Court of Chancery, or in the alternative that the voluntary winding-up of the company might be continued, under the supervision of the court.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Sept. 28; Madras and Allahabad, Sept. 27; Calcutta, Sept. 25.

We receive to-day a ten days' mail—as usual at the change of the monsoon.

The first meeting of the executive committee of the Anglo-Indian Association, formed to oppose Mr. Ilbert's Bill, that has been held since the publication of the local reports on the Bill, took place on Wednesday afternoon week, at Limmer's Hotel, Conduit-street, Sir Alexander Arbuthnot in the chair. The following resolution was moved by Surgeon-General Partridge, seconded by Mr. Lethbridge, and unanimously passed:—"That a memorial be addressed to the Secretary of State, directing his attention to the great balance of Indian opinion, both official and non-official, recorded against the Ilbert Bill, and requesting that further proceedings be postponed until the members of both Houses of Parliament and the public generally have had the fullest opportunity of deliberately weighing and carefully considering the reports submitted to the Government of India."

The Manchester Courier says, of the recent change in the headship of the India Office:—

"The announcement will be read with surprise that Sir Louis Mallet has not been awarded the full pay usually granted to distinguished civil servants on retirement. Considering Sir Louis's long and eminent services both at the Board of Trade and the India Office, which were especially referred to in the House of Commons during the debate on Indian affairs last August, it appears invidious not to confer on him the highest position permitted by the terms of the Superannuation Act."

By the side of this, we may set the announcement in Tuesday's papers that Sir Henry Norman has been appointed Governor of Jamaica. Need we say it is generally understood that Sir Louis Mallet is anything but "spund upon the goose," whilst General Norman is believed to have discovered that his future happiness depends on the passing of the Ilbert Bill? Of a truth it may be said that, with the present Government, "Godliness is great gain." And yet there are some who expect the Legislative Council to vote according to its convictions, and throw out the Viceroy's darling Bill!

We fear that, with the present constitution of the Council, and in view of the careful teaching of the Government, this hope may prove to be founded on too optimistic views of poor frail human nature. Still, if anything could give colour to such optimistic views, it would be the noble vindication of the honour and independence of English officers and gentlemen, afforded by the recently published official reports. In this respect the courageous utterances of the whole body of the administrative officers of India—especially in the Punjab, where local as well as Imperial fanaticism had to be faced—will command the admiration of the world. To sacrifice one's chance of a Governorship or a Chief Commissionership for an opinion indicates a degree of heroism probably higher than that which wins a Victoria Cross.

The meetings in India against the Ilbert Bill naturally become more bitter, as Anglo-Indians begin more generally to appreciate the gross insults offered by Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Bright and their friends to a loyal and honorable body of English citizens. It may confidently be stated that hundreds of Anglo-Indians who have hitherto "voted Liberal" all their lives, will never do so again—or, at any rate, will never vote "Gladstonian" again—after the Premier's shameful sneers about the "ascendency" of Anglo-Indians, and the necessity for checking that ascendency.

We are glad to see that the tea planters are taking up in right earnest the question of the iniquitous Bengal Tenancy Bill, and the allied changes proposed by Lord Ripon in the Rent Law of other provinces. As these changes, if forced into law, will place every landlord in Bengal and the Assam Valley at the mercy, not so much of his tenants as of his capitalist enemies, it is not to be wondered at if the English planters of Assam object to these "monstrosities of Radicalism" as warmly as the zemindars of Bengal and Behar do.

The general strife and uproar, which seem to be Lord Ripon's dearest objects in life, have now extended even to the serene heights of the Supreme Council. Mr. Ilbert and Lord Ripon—par nobile fratrum—are said to be engaged in savage warfare with the Commander-in-Chief and the rest of the Council, on the question of the age of admission to the Civil Service.

One of our contemporaries in Bengal maliciously hopes that Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert, when, at last, they shall have succeeded in quarrelling with everybody else, will conclude the brilliant performance by falling out and eating each other up.

Our Indian news regarding Afghanistan may be summed up in the telegram about the arrival of the Persian Envoy at Cabul. "No special information is as yet available." As yet! Does Lord Ripon hope to get "special information" within the present century? And meanwhile, the telegrams from St. Petersburg show clearly that the disastrous policy of the Gladstone Government, and the disastrous speeches of Mr. Gladstone himself, are about to produce their natural results; and that Russia is preparing for the inevitable onward move that always marks Russian appreciation of the blessings of a Liberal Ministry in England.

WE are exceedingly glad to learn that Dr. Rajendralala Mitra has been elected an honorary member of the Italian Institute for the Advancement of Knowledge. India is honoured by the honour thus done to its foremost scholar.

A SUKKUR telegram, dated the 7th ult., to a contemporary, says:—

"An enthusiastic meeting was held last evening at the Sukkur General Library to protest against the passing of the Ilbert Bill. The hall was crowded, and standing room was not available. Several ladies were present. Resolutions were passed condemning the measure, and deciding to support the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association."

THE Pioneer points out that in the Gazette of India Supplement, containing the Ilbert Bill opinions, the great indignation meeting in the Calcutta Town Hall on February 28 is dismissed in twenty-eight lines, the resolutions only being given; whereas the report of the meeting of the native inhabitants of Bombay, held on April 28, in favour of the Bill, occupies twenty pages, every word printed in the local papers, even to the "enthusiastic cheers" and "great applause" being reproduced.

THE Indian Spectator says:—

"Our disappointment, however, is not due so much to the smallness of the official number in support of the Bill as to the language made use of by some of the opposing officials. Non-officials might indulge in such language. Irresponsible writers might be excused for the vehemence and bitterness of partisan spirit. But such language from responsible authorities, officers paid from the public exchequer for their support of State policy, appears to us to be highly objectionable. No one who knows Mr. Rivers Thompson could help cherishing the liveliest regard for him personally; we say this in spite of what Bengal papers have been writing of him. It is the more disappointing, therefore, to find the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal among the few rabid irreconcilables. His Honour is welcome to his opinions, but he might have been more guarded in expression. Surely, such a worthy man and high official might have set a better example to his subordinates. His attitude cannot be easily accounted for, unless the hand of Providence is at work in the matter—to show that official opposition from Bengal and Assam is neither meant to be relied upon nor followed. But we must not speculate on probabilities. The facts are sufficiently discouraging."

BABU LALMOHUN GHOSE thus accounted for the excitement which has seized the Anglo-Indian community in India:—

ment in the minds of Europeans in India, but when the proposal was introduced in the legislative assembly six months ago, a change has come over the spirit of Europeans in India. Why was this? Because by that time it was found that the intention of Lord Ripon's Government was to mete out even-handed justice between all classes. If there was one thing more than another disliked by advocates of monopolies and upholders of privilege, it was even-handed justice. The official classes of India deeply resented a scheme of local self-government propounded by Lord Ripon, which proposed to transfer from that civil service to local bodies the transaction of municipal affairs, members of such bodies, however, to be under the control and supervision of the central Government. This gave mortal offence to the civil servants of India. Then admirers of Lord Lytton—the Jingo of India—were displeased with Lord Ripon for freeing the Native Press from the shackles formed for them by the previous Administration. Certain appointments of Lord Ripon proved that he was anxious to recognise the legitimate and just claims of the natives of the country. The appointment of a native chief justice of Bengal, and of another of standing counsel to the Government, gave terrible offence to the Calcutta lawyers, who were to a large extent responsible for the present agitation. He was sorry to say this feeling did not stop with the bar, but had spread to the bench. These various causes produced a certain amount of irritation among certain sections of the Anglo-Indian community against the administration of Lord Ripon, and when the Ilbert Bill was introduced, it was felt it presented a splendid opportunity for making an attempt to discredit the Indian Government by raising the cry of liberty, and appeal to the passions and prejudices of the bulk of the Europeans in India, which was likely to be echoed in some parts of England. The result was an agitation of a most persistent and vehement kind that had ever been set on foot in India."

WITH respect to the Indigo Market, we quote the following from the Price Current of Messrs. J. Thomas and Co. :—

"We have now the pleasure to hand a detailed estimate of the result of the season's manufacture, amounting to 138,000 maunds against a crop of 150,278 last year. Compared with the figures given a fortnight ago, we have slightly increased our Lower Bengal estimate, whilst, as regards Behar, the Khoontee returns have been much more favourable than was at one time expected, so much so, that the estimated outturn for the district is but little under the final figures for last season. Our estimated figures for the Benares Provinces and the Doab will, as regards the European factories, be found fairly correct, whilst more than the usual uncertainty exists as to the native production. In the early part of this month our reports from the North West were most discouraging, but since then heavy and seasonable rain is reported to have done much good, and this fact, coupled with the undoubted increase in the native cultivation, leads us to expect the figures given below will be realised :—LOWER BENGAL, estimated crop for 1882-83, 16,000 maunds. BEHAR: Monghyr, 2,350; Tirhoot, 24,000; Chumparun, 16,300; Ghuprah, 13,350. BENARES PROVINCES: Europeans, 8,000; Natives, 8,000. DOAB: Europeans, 5,000; Natives, 45,000. Total factory maunds, 138,000 maunds."

THE same firm thus report on the positions of the Tea Market :—

"The usual weekly sales have been held since we last wrote, amounting to the large quantity of 31,644 packages, and of these 30,491 found buyers, viz., 14,043 on the 13th and 16,448 chests on the 20th September, 1883. The demand continued good throughout, particularly for low and medium qualities of Pekoe Souchongs and Broken Teas at, and under eight annas, which were quite half an anna per lb. dearer. Desirable Darjeeling descriptions were well competed for at fully previous rates; on the other hand, good and medium Assam and Cachar Teas were occasionally a shade easier. Our manufacturing reports are not particularly good; floods and blight have been very prevalent in Cachar, and both there, and in Darjeeling and the Terai the outturn promises to be under last year. In Assam a good deal of Tea is being made, and it is possible that estimates may nearly be realised, but at present it appears to us that the total crop will be considerably under the estimate, even if it exceeds that of last season."

THE Englishman gives the following with respect to the Freight Market :—

"Our rates of freight during the past week have fluctuated considerably, especially by sailing vessels, which, after experiencing a considerable decline, have recovered, and exceeded even those of last week. By canal, rates have steadied slightly, but cargo is not freely offering. Jute, which is our principle article of export at this time of the year, is very scarce, and if the general expectation of an unusually short crop is realised, the prospects for freights for the next six months will be anything but brilliant. Four vessels have been chartered during the week, one for London, and three for New York. Our unfixed tonnage amounts to 40,000 tons."

THE Times of India gives the following obituary for the ten days ending Sept. 28 :—Lieut. Col. Walter Musgrave, commandant of the 5th Bengal Cavalry; Mr. Richard Ellis Wilson, sub-engineer of the Rewari-Ferozepore Railway; Mr. Shaik Dawood, Talukdar of Aurangabad; Mr. E. B. Cottell, of the Lallaklall tea gardens; Mr. C. T. Winifred, headmaster of the Hindu High School, Trichinopoly; Mr. John Francis Fernandez, retired Treasury Deputy Collector, South Canara; Mr. A. Anthony, Deputy Accountant General of the Punjab; Mr. James Cameron Dunbar, of Messrs. R. Steel & Co., Calcutta; Captain T. W. Marten, Retired List; Prince Mahomed Ali Mirza, alias Amir Sahib, third son of the ex-Nawab Nazim of Moorshedabad.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE following is the official summary of the reports of the Revenue and Agricultural Department on the state of the season and prospects of the crops throughout India for the week ending the 18th September :—

"In the Carnatic Travancore, and parts of the Southern Mahratta Country the rainfall of the past week has been somewhat deficient, and more rain is wanted for unirrigated crops; otherwise the prospects in Southern India are fair. There has been a slight rise in the river in Sind, but it remains below its usual level; at Kurrachee, however, it is reported to be higher than last year. In Hyderabad and the Berars the crops are generally in excellent condition, and throughout Central India and Rajputana good, and in some places abundant rain has greatly benefited the kharif and improved the pasturage. In Burma, Assam, and Bengal crop prospects are on the whole favourable, although some damage has been done by past floods, and more rain is wanted in parts of Behar and Central Bengal. In the North-Western Provinces and Oudh and Central Provinces the rice crop has suffered from the long break in August, but other crops are doing well, and the rainfall of the week under report has been generally and very beneficial. Hardly any rain fell during the week in the Punjab but prospects there have materially improved. Harvesting is still in progress in Madras. Ploughing and sowing for the rabi have begun in the Bombay Presidency, Rajputana, the Central Provinces, and the North-Western Provinces and Oudh; and the early kharif crops are being out. Reaping of early rice and jute continues in Bengal, the outturn being generally fair. In Burma rice sowings have been finished, and transplanting is nearly completed. Cattle-disease in mild form is reported from most districts; in Burma the mortality has slightly increased. Cholera still exists in Bombay, the Central Provinces, and Northern India, but is decreasing. The usual autumnal fevers prevail. Prices are keeping steady."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated Oct. 8, did not arrive in time for our last issue :—

"The Council of the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association assembled a few days ago to consider the present attitude of the Government regarding the Ilbert Bill, and passed a series of resolutions. As those resolutions very accurately represent the feeling of the Anglo-Indian community, and have met with general approval from the Press and the public, I shall quote them in extenso :—

"1. That in the opinion of this council every legislative measure, in however modified a form, which seeks to render European British subjects liable to the criminal jurisdiction of native magistrates and judges is vicious and obnoxious in principle, and cannot but prove oppressive and disastrous in practice."

"2. That this council have reason to believe that any further endeavour to force a measure of this description into law would be viewed as a high-handed and inequitable exercise of arbitrary power, and a wanton and deliberate affront to the collective public opinion of practically the whole European and Anglo-Indian community."

"3. That it is the duty of the Defence Association and of the whole European community to maintain an attitude of strenuous opposition to every legislative enactment which shall seek to validate the principle of subordinating European British subjects to the criminal jurisdiction of natives."

"4. That the legal power of the Indian Legislature to pass such an Act has been challenged for valid reasons by some of the ablest lawyers in India, and such power has never been affirmed by any decision of Her Majesty's Privy Council; and that, moreover, whether such power be vested in the Legislative Council or not, special class legislation of this character, when divested of the sanction of the community against which its provisions are directed, would necessarily, in public estimation, be deprived of political, moral, and equitable obligation, and, as a measure of public utility, would stand self-condemned as morally inefficient and politically inoperative.

"5. That in the event of any such measure being enacted it will be the duty of the Anglo-Indian community until such time as such measure shall have been duly repealed to endeavour to minimise its injustice by collectively aiding with funds and moral support every member of the community, whatsoever his position in life, who shall exercise his right of refusing to plead to a criminal jurisdiction which has been all but universally condemned by collective Anglo-Indian public opinion as an unprovoked, inequitable, and capricious invasion of the existing status of European British subjects in India."

"The European community of the Cachar district held a crowded and enthusiastic meeting at Silchar on the 29th ult., when a number of resolutions were passed condemning the want of consideration for the opinions of Europeans shown by the Government, and pledging the community in the event of the Bill being passed to resist it individually and collectively by all legal means.

"The tea planters of Jorehaut in Assam followed suit last Tuesday and passed similar resolutions, adding an emphatic protest against the party spirit displayed by the Home Government throughout the controversy, and the manner in which the real interests of India had been ignored, for the purpose of gaining credit by carrying out what was mis-called liberality at the expense of the European residents.

"Meetings have also been held during the past week at Allahabad and other places.

"The Commissioner of the Bhaugulpore division in his administration report makes the following remarks regarding public feeling on the subject of Mr. Ilbert's Bill:—'It has only created interest among Europeans and educated natives. The former, official and non-official, are to a man dead against the measure, and of the latter only the most advanced and English-speaking section are for it.'

"It is currently reported, but on somewhat doubtful authority, that the Bill will not be further considered till March.

"The committee lately appointed to consider the reorganisation of the Public Works Department has recommended the adoption of the Secretary of State's proposal with certain modifications. Among these are the payment of pensions in conventional sterling, increased pensions to executive engineers who are compulsorily retired, and the extension of the new furlough rules to all the members of the department. The committee express the opinion that the emoluments of the civil and military members of the department should be equalised, and the department reconstituted on a purely civil basis.

"Mr. Gibbs will act as President of the Council during the Viceroy's absence in Cashmere.

"A strange and fatal accident is reported from the Central Provinces. Dr. Jackson, civil surgeon of Pachmarree, while out tiger shooting with a friend, was attacked by hornets and received over 200 stings. Erysipelas set in and proved fatal. His friend was saved by the presence of mind of his servant, who dragged him into the jungle, but not before he had been stung severely. In this case, however, no evil consequences followed."

The following is the usual weekly telegram from the Times correspondent, dated Darjeeling, Oct. 14:—

"The newspapers continue to devote a large portion of their space to accounts of meetings held in various parts of the country for the purpose of protesting against the Ilbert Bill. The opinions expressed at these meetings generally follow the lines of the resolutions passed by the Anglo-Indian Defence Association, which were last week telegraphed to the Times. The persistent efforts of the advocates of the measure at home and in India to misrepresent the attitude of its opponents are strongly denounced. The intrusion of party politics into the question is deprecated, and care is taken to make it clear that the opposition is not actuated by any general dislike to Lord Ripon's policy, or by any wish to debar the natives from the opportunity of attaining to high office. The avowed intention of the Government to disregard the majority of the official reports, and the sneering language used by Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Bright concerning Anglo-Indians, are always mentioned with indignation, and the meetings invariably wind up with a resolution binding those present to resist by every legal means the passing of the Bill and to oppose its working if it should be passed. It is very evident that the agitation, far from dying out, is daily gathering fresh strength, and that the Viceroy has only succeeded in exasperating the European and unsettling the native community.

"The proposed changes in the rent law seem likely to cause an excitement second only to that aroused by the Ilbert Bill.

At a meeting of the Jorehaut branch committee of the Indian Tea Association the following resolution was unanimously passed:—

"That, the draft of the proposed rent law for the Assam Valley being highly prejudicial to the interests of the entire body of Europeans connected with land, this committee strongly urges that the Europeans in all the districts of the Assam Valley, though absorbed in the all-engrossing subject of the Ilbert Bill, should take this important matter into careful consideration, and send representations on the objectionable provisions of the Bill to the authorities as soon as possible.

"The Chief Commissioner for the Central Provinces held a Durban on the 4th inst. for the purpose of inaugurating the District Council of Nagpore, under the Central Provinces Local Self-Government Act. In the course of his remarks, Mr. Jones assured his audience that there was no intention of making the grant of local self-government an excuse for adding to local burdens. He further observed that the Act effected no radical change of policy, but merely declared that the time had come when the tutelary guardianship of the Government officers might cease and the people be left to walk alone.

"The question of altering the standard of age for the Indian Civil Service competition has recently been reopened in the Executive Council. It is believed that the Viceroy urges a return to the standard which prevailed before the changes made by the late Ministry, his object being to remove the difficulties alleged to affect any natives desirous of entering as competitors. Mr. Ilbert is said to support Lord Ripon, but the majority of the Council strenuously oppose the making of any change in the present rules; and it is reported that the Commander-in-Chief has recorded a strong minute of dissent. According to a rumour prevalent at Simla, however, the Viceroy is determined to move the Ministry on the subject.

"Yesterday's Government Gazette contains an Order organising the officers of the Indian Marine. Commanders will rank with lieutenant-colonels, and first grade officers with majors. Military forces appointed to serve as Marines will be detailed from the native army on the requisition of the Director of Marine. The vessels of the Indian Marine, with the sanction of the Admiralty, will hoist a blue ensign, with the Star of India in the fly as a distinguishing badge. The commanders will have the official title of captain, such title carrying no precedence.

"The Committee appointed to consider the best means of extending the shipping accommodation of the port of Calcutta has presented a report. This document states that the trade of the port urgently requires an immediate extension of the accommodation, especially for exports, and the principal recommendations made are an extension of the wharves for loading boats on the Howrah foreshore, and the construction of wet docks at Kidderpore and of a railway bridge connecting the East Indian and Eastern Bengal lines at Cossipore. The members of the Committee believe that these works will be financially successful if the trade of the port be restricted to its present limits, and that they will yield a large profit in the event of a further development of that trade.

"Some rain fell in Bengal last week, but much anxiety is still felt concerning the late rice.

"Mr. Graham, the Alpine climber, has been deserted by his coolies. He has sent to Darjeeling for fresh coolies, and is believed to be awaiting their arrival near the base of the Kinohinjunga.

"The Ameer, besides occupying Shighnan, as reported from St. Petersburg, has also occupied Wakhan, placing an Afghan governor in charge of both provinces. The former Governor of Wakhan, Ali Murdan Shah, has fled, taking refuge in Yassin. The late Mir of Shighnan is a prisoner at Cabul. Both Shighnan and Wakhan owe allegiance to Badakshan, and hence the Ameer's action is entirely within his right.

"The Jellalabad district is tranquil, and there is increasing quietude in Zurmud and Kalaway.

"A Persian envoy arrived in Cabul on Sept. 26. No special information is as yet available regarding the objects of his mission."

The following telegram from the St. Petersburg correspondent of the Times is dated Oct. 15:—

"Telegrams continue to arrive from Central Asia with reference to the new territories which the Ameer of Afghanistan has recently annexed to his dominions. The latest published here reports that another small region, that of Wakhan, ruled over by a Bek, and continuous with the first reported acquisition of Shighnan, has been occupied and incorporated into Afghanistan. The ruler of Wakhan is said to have fled with all his property, herds, and followers. The Bek of Shighnan, before he was captured by the Afghans and sent to Cabul, went on Russian territory, and solicited Russian shelter and protection. His request was refused, and he had to fall back into the hands of his enemies.

"The territory of Wakhan has always been regarded as dependent upon Badakshan, and was finally accepted by Prince Gortchakoff as part of Afghanistan, although it seems that the Russian Government considered this arrangement as cancelled by a speech Mr. Gladstone subsequently delivered in the House of Commons. According to Schuyler, Shignan was never intended by Russia to belong to Afghanistan.

"The subject is as yet obscurely treated by the Russian Press, and there is a dispute as to whether the new Afghan frontiers actually touch those of Russia or not. The St. Petersburg Viedomosti insists that as Russian troops were pushed right up to the border of Shignan in the expedition of 1875-1876 the two frontiers must touch at this point. The British Government, according to all accounts, must have been aware of these movements of the Afmeat a month or two ago."

MR. GLADSTONE'S LESSON ON ANGLO-INDIAN "ASCENDENCY" EXPOUNDED BY THE "AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA."

MR. GLADSTONE is reported to have said that "they (Anglo-Indians) were inclined to indulge in a spirit of ascendancy, which must be checked." There is no doubt that Anglo-Indians are growing into a power, both in this country and England, and a true English statesman cannot fail to discern in them a source of danger to English constitution. The Anglo-Indians, though many of them are born and brought up in England, lose many of the noble qualities of an Englishman, by a long residence in this country. An average Anglo-Indian may be described as a hybrid production of irresponsible despotism and oriental Nihilism, and, as such, possesses a good deal of the vices of a mongrel race. He is an object of terror and dislike generally to the Indians, who will avoid him as if he were a ferocious animal, while a free-born Briton will hardly recognise him as one belonging to his own race.

There is no doubt that India is a useful field for the employment of superfluous manhood of England, but the occupation of India and its Government by English agency is doing mischief to England in a most vital part. Every thoughtful Englishman should take note of this fact and ponder on it seriously. The Anglo-Indians are now settling down in England by hundreds and thousands, and making their influence felt there. In one sense they are useless in England, because, virtually they are strangers to the land. Their modes of thought, and training are different from those of an Englishman. A Japanese can scarcely be a useful member of English society. Why should then an Anglo-Indian be? He is almost as much a stranger to England as a Japanese or a Chinaman. A trained archer cannot be of any service in a modern regiment. He will feel himself out of element there, as an Anglo-Indian feels himself in England.

An Anglo-Indian has no accurate idea of the principle of a constitutional Government. If he is, therefore, entrusted with any public business in England, he will find himself beset with difficulties on all sides. He finds too much law to entangle him at every step, and in despair he prefers to lead a private life to serving a country which is so different from that in which he has been trained. Would you employ an Anglo-Indian as a political in Europe? He will spoil everything at once; for he has learnt in India that the heart of diplomacy lies solely in bullying a foreign State. Would you appoint him as an engineer? He has no local experience. A magistrate? He will soon come to grief by over-riding the law. As a merchant he has a different training. As a public officer he is either too rich or too proud to serve on a pay which England allows. He is too imperious and selfish to form a useful or general member in private society. You can no doubt make him a Member of Parliament, but he will prove a veritable bore there.

In Parliament one must have the patience to bear what his opponent has to say. Now fancy Sir Ashley Eden in Parliament! And Sir Ashley is a typical Anglo-Indian ruler! He makes a proposal which is laughed at by the members present, and do you think Sir Ashley will stay another moment in the House—Sir Ashley whose wish was, perhaps, never crossed during the whole course of his official life? An Anglo-Indian has a scanty knowledge of domestic politics and a scantier knowledge of the affairs of the foreign States. His notions of right and wrong cannot exactly agree with those of an Englishman. And such a man can do as little in Parliament as in public office.

But the Anglo-Indians are now threatening to overrun England. If they gain an ascendancy in the Councils of England which they eventually must do, if India continues to send them back laden with gold in the numbers that she is doing now, then they will have all in their own way, at no distant period. We have noticed this threatened danger to the constitution of England several times in our columns, and we believe many Englishmen are gradually coming to perceive it. If England sends her manhood for service in this country, we send there now and then young men for education. These young men return from England completely denationalised. They have been trained in different modes of thought and life, and are threatening to form themselves into a strong community.

If they go on strengthening their ranks by new recruits every year, they shall, no doubt, be able to exert their influence upon the Hindu Society. Whether their views on social or political matters are correct or not is a matter of opinion. But this much is certain, if they ever gain an ascendancy in this country they will make it a tabula rasa for respectable men to know English and to go to England for general education. They will introduce forbidden meat, make beads, coats, and hats fashionable, abolish caste, the "Zemina system," &c. In short, they will try to introduce these novelties which they had met with in England.

"In another article in the same paper, the same lesson is still further developed:—

The English people have an instinctive love for that form of government in which the will of many persons prevails as opposed to the form in which the will of one person prevails. They have a horror of absolute monarchy. They cannot see the people of this country, because they cannot point to any past epoch at which they had a popular form of government and not a despotic one. They are puzzled to understand how possibly any Hindu or Mahomedan could think of the form of the Russian Government without alarm.

There is a grand mistake underlying these sentiments and thoughts. The fact is, the absolute despotic form of government is not in all cases worse than mixed and complicated forms. By absolute despotic form of government we mean government by one man. By mixed form we mean government by a number of men. Now, as a matter of fact, the government of the man may, in many cases, be infinitely superior to government by many. A representative form of government by many is no doubt the best. But, at the same time, a non-representative form of government by many is the worst of all. A simple and pure form of government by one, though inferior to a representative popular government, is undoubtedly far better than a non-representative government by many.

RENT-BILL MEETING AT HUGHLI.

A LARGE and influential meeting of the principal landholders of Hughli was held at the hall of the Serampore College on the 1st ult. Babu Jankissen Mukerjee was elected to the chair. The Chairman explained to the meeting the salient features of the Bill. Several speakers followed him and the following resolutions were then unanimously passed:—

Proposed by Baboo Chunder Kant Mukerjee. Seconded by Baboo Abhay Chandra Nundy.

1. That this meeting views with anxiety and alarm the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Bill which involve a direct breach of the terms of Permanent Settlement and a great threat to vested rights of property acquired for large and valuable considerations.

Proposed by Baboo Buddon Chunder Chowdhry. Seconded by Babu Nundlal Goswain.

2. That while the effect of the proposed measure would be to impoverish both the landholders and ryots by taking away valuable rights from them and setting them against one another at every step in their ordinary transactions, it would create a class of middlemen whose influence on the agricultural interests and on the social economy would be of a most pernicious character.

Proposed by Babu Annoda Prosad Dey. Seconded by Babu Rajkristo Banerjee.

3. That a memorial be submitted to His Excellency the Viceroy submitting the views of the meeting on the provisions of the Bill, and that a sub-committee composed of the following gentlemen be appointed with power to add to their number to draw up and submit such memorial:

Baboo Joykissen Mukerjee, Chunderkanto Mukerjee, Belbykristo Mukerjee, Nundlal Goswain, Kisorilal Goswami, Suddodoyal Banerjee, Rajendrakrishna Nundy, Buddon Chunder Chowdhry, Annoda Prosad Dey, and Nolit Mohun Singh.

COLONEL OSBORN (OF THE INDIAN REFORM ASSOCIATION) ON INDIAN CIVILIANS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ECHO."

SIR,—The Indian mail which arrived this morning brought to this country the opinions of the collectors, judges, and other covenanted civilians in the Lower Provinces, i.e., Bengal, Behar, and Orissa—upon the (so-called) Ilbert Bill. It will be seen that the officers whose opinions have been solicited are unanimously against the passing of the Bill. This unanimity will certainly be made the most of by the opponents of the Bill in this country. Actually it shows that the opinions of these gentlemen are quite worthless. If the unanimity had not been so complete—if only a man here and there had come to a conclusion favourable to the passing of the Bill—then, by making believe very much, it might have been possible for a credulous man to credit these gentlemen with coming to the consideration of the subject with candid and unbiased minds. But this parrot-like repetition of objection—this perfect harmony of condemnation—establishes conclusively to my thinking that these gentlemen have had in their minds something quite different from the merits or demerits of the little measure on which they effect to be giving an opinion. What that something is will be a mystery to no one who has been in India, and who has observed the Indian civilian from a standpoint outside of the Covenanted Civil Service. With the rarest exceptions, it is a moral impossibility for an Indian civilian to look at any question of Indian policy except from the standpoint of his own interest, and that of the service of which he is a member. To preserve to this service its gigantic emoluments, its absolute power, its monopoly of all the most lucrative appointments in India, ninety-nine civilians out of every hundred have honestly persuaded themselves it is precisely the same thing as to preserve the highest interests of the people of India. A century ago Edmund Burke described the Constitution of the Indian Civil Service, and his description is as true to-day as it was when it was first spoken. "The English in India," he said, "are nothing but a seminary for the succession of officers. They are a nation of placemen; they are a commonwealth without a people; they are a State made up wholly of magistrates. There is nothing to be in propriety called people—to watch, to inspect, to balance against the power of office. The power of office, so far as the English nation is concerned, is the sole power of the country. The consequence of which is that, being a kingdom of magistrates, what is commonly called esprit de corps is strong in it. The spirit of the body predominates equally in all its parts; by which the members must consider themselves as having a common interest, and that common interest separated both from that of the country which sent them out and from that of the country in which they act. No control upon them exists—none, I mean, in persons who understand their language, who understand their manners, or can apply their conduct to the laws. Therefore in a body so constituted confederacy is easy, and has been general. Your lordships are not to expect that that should happen in such a body which never happened in any body or corporation; that is, that they should in any instance be a proper control and check upon themselves." The narrowing and blighting effect of an Indian career, no matter how distinguished it is officially accounted to be, is shown by the pitiful figures presented by our great Indian administrators the moment they return to the bracing political atmosphere of a free country. Gentlemen who, if we are to trust the accounts of "the service," have exhibited in the East political qualities of the highest order, are no sooner transplanted to this country than they sink into utter obscurity, or, if they manage to get into Parliament, scrupulously abstain from being of the smallest national advantage. And this result is only natural, if we consider the life-long training of an English civilian in India. He goes to that country when still young; when he is practically unacquainted with the working of free institutions, when he has had little or no opportunity of measuring his own capacity against that of others, and finds himself all at once called upon (to quote Edmund Burke once more) "to exercise functions at which a Statesman here would tremble, without any theoretical study, and without any of that sort of experience which in mixed societies of business and converse form men gradually and insensibly to great affairs." Whether he discharge those functions well or ill makes no difference. In either case he is surrounded by a circle of obsequious native underlings, who burn incense before him, do him homage, and flatter his self love in an infinite variety of ways. As he rises in the service, the quantity of incense that is burnt before him becomes proportionally greater, with the result that he becomes altogether intoxicated with a sense of his own manifold perfection, and is quite honestly convinced that so marvellous a Statesman and administrator as he has rarely been born into the world. But your Indian civilian, if he desires to rise rapidly in the service, must also be a persistent incense-burner himself. Obsequious as may be the native underlings around him, he is bound to be not a whit less obsequious to those greater magnates who sit in high places, with an immense deal of patronage at their disposal. The first—the quite indispensable—requisite for getting on in the Indian Civil Service is that a man should have no convictions of his own. He must learn to regard himself and to act as a piece of machinery, to be set in motion, and to grind out results according to orders received from above. After a few years of persistence in this line of conduct it is really surprising to observe how completely a rising civilian will have succeeded in emptying himself of the attributes of a reasonable being. He is good for little else except to glorify the service to which he belongs, and to revile and calumniate the people from whom he derives his subsistence. There is at present in India (I speak of that which I know) a hearty—nay, a passionate—loyalty to the Government of Lord Ripon, combined with an equally passionate dislike of the rule of "civilianism." How just and reasonable that dislike is may be ascertained by anyone who cares to read an article in the current number of the Fortnightly Review by Sir Lepel Griffin, agent for the Governor-General for Central India. This article (on which, with your permission, I shall make a few remarks in a second letter) is filled from beginning to end with vulgar and indecent abuse of the native princes, by whom the stipend of this vituperative personage is paid. The article is as gross an outrage upon the princes and the people of India as if one of our ambassadors, while in residence at a foreign Court, should make use of a London periodical to revile the Government and the nation to which he is accredited. That neither the official decency required by his position, nor other considerations should have availed to restrain Sir Lepel Griffin, shows how completely the English civilians have lost "touch" of the people. They regard them as creatures, without abilities which seek scope for their exercise, without a sense of honour which can be wounded, and without resentment which can wait for a day of retaliation. They are, in fact, according to the civilian conception, soulless things, to be ruled and reviled by highly-salaried civilians, and to be thankful for both.—I am, Sir,

Oct. 8.

ROBERT D. OSBORN, Lieut. Colonel.

THE "WESTERN MORNING NEWS" ON INDIAN CIVILIANS.

Our administration of India is a perennial theme for criticism and condemnation on the part of a certain class of politicians. We are told that as we won India by the sword, so we hold her, and so only can we retain her. The inhabitants are represented as utterly devoid of affection for us, as detesting our rule, and as groaning under the despotic sway of English officials, who arrogant, supercilious, and scornful—treat the natives as an alien and conquered people, whose sympathies and feelings are not worthy of consideration, and whose prejudices are beneath contempt. Even though he may be above the temptation of a bribe, and does not "sell the justice" he is appointed to administer, yet he metes it out unequally to the European and the native—the former finding him a gentle judge; the latter stern, severe, and oftentimes cruel. This is no overdrawn picture of the ideal Anglo-Indian official as portrayed by Englishmen in England. Now let us compare it with one of an actual official drawn by Hindoos in Hindostan. "As a judge . . . he was careful, impartial, patient, and merciful, so that his decisions gave universal satisfaction; to all his numerous subordinates of every grade he was unaffectedly considerate and courteous; towards his native friends he uniformly exhibited an effability and generous freedom from race prejudices that were extremely gratifying, and rendered him highly and deservedly popular; whilst generally towards all classes of the people such was the charity and kindness of his heart—sympathising in their troubles and co-operating liberally in all movements for their welfare—that the honoured name of 'Phillpotts Sahib' was as familiar to all as a household word, and will, we feel sure, for years to come be held in affectionate and grateful remembrance." Such is the language used by the committee representing the native citizens of Ahmedabad, in a letter of condolence sent to the Ven. Archdeacon Phillpotts on the death of his son, Mr. Sextus Howard Phillpotts, sessions judge of Ahmedabad, who died of cholera after only a few hours' illness. Mr. Phillpotts had had a distinguished career in the Indian Civil Service, and, according to native testimony, had won "a reputation for unswerving impartiality, unimpeachable integrity, and great kindness of disposition." In the populous city where he died his death was "lamented as a public calamity," and a large and influential meeting of natives resolved that some useful and fitting memorial should "keep in perpetual recollection the cherished name of 'Phillpotts Sahib.'" No more eloquent proof of esteem and affection could be borne in respect of any man; and that it is deserved is shown not only by the record of past services, but by the fact that in his will Mr. Phillpotts had made liberal provision for the needs of the poor among whom his lot was cast. It is of such men as he that England has cause to be proud. Quietly and unostentatiously they have built up and consolidated our great empire, and have done, and are still doing, truer, nobler, and more lasting service for their country than many a much belauded and rewarded general, the glamour of whose ephemeral achievements divert our attention from the invaluable labours of that numerous band of civilians who are the envy and the admiration of the whole world.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE BATTLE OF PORT SAID.*

THIS is, as the author puts it, a chapter in the history of the future, similar to the famed "Battle of Dorking." It forcibly shows, that if we allow affairs in our Navy to go on exactly as they are, and keep it at the same strength, in the course of a very few years we must be completely over-matched by a combination against us that might easily occur at any time. It is a strong corroboration in a popular form of the views that are held by Captain Bedford Pinn, Lord Henry Lennox, Lord George Hamilton, and others who have done their best to call attention to the vital error of allowing our Navy to fall behind in the struggle for supremacy.

THE "ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE."

THE Army and Navy Magazine for October contains an account by Colonel Malleson of the battle of Lützen, and the death of the great Gustavus Adolphus. Mr. Keane brings to a conclusion his series of articles on "Indian districts during the Revolt," narrating the state of affairs in Rohilkhand, and giving a brief summary of the causes of the Mutiny. In an article on "Royal Marines and our Coast Fortresses," Colonel Parnell, R.E., makes a suggestion with regard to the formation of a regular fortress service, and partial amalgamation of the three branches of the service, that seems well worthy of consideration. A "Voluntary Student" writing of the Royal Naval College, shows that that institution, which should be so valuable to the Naval Service and the country, is in danger of having its practical training stifled by undue prominence being given to Mathematics. It may be remembered that the Military Staff College was at one time in that case, and that it was only after the strongest representations that the Mathematical course was reduced to moderate limits, and that practical training for service requirements took its place with great advantage to all. The incidents during the Mutiny year, narrated by Captain Taylor are very interesting; and Major Graham's article on "Pre-eminence in War," which closes the Magazine, shows much erudition in military history well applied to the subject in hand. We must, however, object to his statement that Napoleon's generals were possessed of what he calls "instinct of battle" enabling them to form up troops quickly for attack; it is far more probable that the quality was due to practice in the field without which no man can become a good general, and of that practice Napoleon's generals had a considerable amount.

MAJOR GOWAN'S INDICES TO MARVIN'S WORKS ON CENTRAL ASIA.

MAJOR W. E. GOWAN, of the Intelligence Branch at Simla, who has made a reputation as a Russian scholar by his translations of General Kouropatkin's "Kashgaria" and Ivanoff's "Russian Grammar," has taken upon himself the useful task of publishing in India a series of indices to Charles Marvin's works on Central Asia. The voluminous character of Marvin's writings on the subject is well known to the reader. Since 1880 he has published on the Russian advance five distinct works, consisting collectively of 1,879 pages of printed matter, besides innumerable articles, pamphlets, &c. As these works are largely composed of original Russian data, of value to the military and political authorities in India, Major Gowan is of opinion that they would be rendered all the more valuable if a general index were published of their contents. He has, therefore, taken in hand the compilation of one, which he will issue in parts, each being distinct in itself. The first part issued deals with "The Russian Advance towards India," and bears every trace of careful and conscientious compilation. Major Gowan has introduced a good feature in giving prominence to facts of special importance in excess of chronicling them in their proper order. Thus, for instance, under "Turkestan" we find Marvin's definition given in full—"Whatever may be the etymological meaning of the words Turkestan, Turkmenia, or the Turkoman region, Turkestan signifies exclusively the Russian territory in Central Asia, administered from Tashkent and Turkmenia, or Turkomania, the country of the Turkomans administered from Tiflis." We are glad to see officers in India taking up actively the Central Asian Question, and trust that the Government will not lose sight of such useful labours as that of Major Gowan's.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL DENOUNCED BY A RADICAL JOURNAL.

"A CONSTANT READER" in our correspondence columns calls attention to what he deems to be an inconsistency between our present writings on the subject of zemindar rights in these provinces, and the opinions expressed by us in the London Statesman on the same subject in 1880. If the writer, instead of quoting very elliptically from what we then said, will read the whole paper attentively, he will find that we assumed all through that paper that both the zemindar and the middleman possess contract rights under the Cornwallis settlement for which the State must compensate them, if it intends to withdraw them by legislation on the subject. We stand by what we have been writing for the last twenty-five years concerning the settlement. Our views generally is that a "survey" of the land is peremptorily needed, and a record of rights. The "middlemen" should be bought out once for all, and as many of the zemindars as can be induced to surrender their lands, but there must be no confiscation on the ground that what was done a hundred years ago ought not to have been done. It is sufficient at this lapse of time that it was done. But what was done cannot now be determined by legislation. It belongs to the courts of law alone to determine what the rights of the zemindar under the settlement really are. All parties will agree that what the State did by the Permanent Settlement Regulations, and what it intended to do, was to hand over to the zemindar every claim upon the soil which it believed the State itself to possess, and to have been accustomed to assert therein. And the consideration for which it did this, was the settled perpetual annuity which the zemindars bound themselves to pay the State for all time, for the transfer of these rights. All that the State had the right to exact from the land, and had been accustomed to exact therefrom, it sold, we say, to the zemindar for the perpetual annuity which the latter agreed to pay for these State rights. It will not be asserted by anyone, that Lord Cornwallis intended to sell to the zemindar rights which the State did not itself possess, still less that it intended to include in the sale, the right which from the nature of things is inherent in every State, and of which it cannot divest itself—the right to legislate for the welfare of the country. Lord Cornwallis, with full knowledge of what he was doing, resolved to transfer by sale to the zemindar every right whatever that the State possessed to share in the produce of the soil, the price being the perpetual annuity which the zemindars agreed to pay for these rights. It is, we think, strictly right to describe it as a contract, although there was no freedom in the contract. The agreement was imposed upon the zemindar: not negotiated with him. He had no choice in the matter. He had either to accept the terms imposed upon him, or to surrender his position as zemindar, without compensation of any kind. Now it is admitted that the terms proved to be so onerous, that a large proportion of the zemindars were ruined in their attempt to fulfil the engagements imposed upon them by the regulations. They failed to fulfil the terms forced upon them by what was declared, or held to be, their "contract," although they had no part in framing it whatever; and they were made to pay the full penalty of the failure by the sale and forfeiture of their lands.

The zemindars and their successors have thus very strong ground for affirming that they hold these lands by "contract." They are not landlords by any right of antiquity, or descent, or of inheritance. They say with perfect truthfulness, we think, to the Government: "You imposed this contract upon us by force. We neither sought for it, nor desired it. We were not consulted by you in the framing of its terms. You settled the terms yourselves, and required us to accept them, or to surrender our position as the penalty of refusal. It would have been infinitely better for many of our fathers if they had refused your terms, and surrendered their office as zemindars into your hands. Having forced the 'contract' upon us, and compelled us to pay the price you exacted for it, when it was actual ruin to us to fulfil it, you must not turn round now that the 'contract' has become profitable to us, and deprive us of it, unless you are prepared to pay us 'compensation.' If you dispute the construction which we put upon the contract, you cannot settle its meaning by legislation which we complain violates its terms. You must proceed against us in the Courts before H.M. judges. It is they only who can determine what the 'contract' means. You say it means one thing. We say it means another. And you propose to decide the matter in your own favour, by making a fresh law upon the subject. Where was this ever heard of, under righteous rule? If your interpretation of the 'contract' is right, the judges will uphold it; if ours, they will uphold ours. The rights of all parties will then be clear so far. Should the decision go against you, and you deem it necessary, in the interests of the common weal, to modify the contract and change its terms adversely to ourselves, you will have the full right to do so. It will be your duty to do so, and we shall submit loyally and humbly to have our 'rights' revised and circumscribed accordingly, and to any extent that you may believe the interests of the common weal demand, because any such legislation will be attended with compensation to us for your breach of a contract that you yourselves imposed upon us, and that you forced us to respect when it was ruin to us. You must not now repudiate the contract by arbitrarily interpreting it in your own way, in your own favour, or in the favour of the ryot, or of any other class whatever." Is there any answer to this appeal? We are inclined to think there is not: and that the Legislative Council is not the tribunal before which the quarrel should come at the present stage of matters. We have done so much harm in India and so much wrong by incessant and hasty legislation that we are inclined to think it would be far wiser for the Government to settle, in some way, the issues upon which the two parties are at variance as to the "contract" of 1793. The quarrel cannot, it seems to us, be properly dealt with legislatively at this stage because there is a vital difference between the parties as to the interpretation to be put upon the contract. If the judges in the last Court of Appeal decide that the Zemindars are right, it will not stop our legislating, while it will remove all heart-burning by making "compensation" a first principle in any changes we may make in the fortunes of the Zemindar. Should the judges on the other hand, declare against the Zemindars' construction of the contract, we can give effect to the proposed changes without injustice of any kind. It is not the first time that we have made this suggestion of an appeal to the Law Courts to determine the rights of the zemindar and the State respectively, under Lord Cornwallis's regulations. It certainly seems that the time has now come when we are bound to do so. The best legal talent that can be commanded should be employed on both sides, to settle the precise issues to be argued before the judges, and finally on appeal before the Supreme Courts in England. If the zemindars are wise they will memorialise the Government, we think, in this sense, praying that before legislation is attempted, with the avowed purpose of "interpreting" the regulations of 1793, the true meaning of those regulations on the great issues which this legislation will raise should be determined by suit in the High Court of Calcutta. It is of little consequence whether we legislate now, or two years hence. What is greatly to be deprecated is the haste which has so generally marked and marred all our past attempts to improve the law. Do not common sense and ordinary justice suggest, that as the zemindars and the Government are at issue as to the meaning of the regulations of 1793, the Courts should be asked to interpret authoritatively the points at issue, before anything else is done? Meanwhile we shall take an early opportunity of stating the ends that we think should be kept steadily in view, in any changes which the Government may make as to the occupancy of the land.—Friend of India and Statesman.

THE "INDIAN DAILY NEWS" ON THE BENGAL RENT BILL.

THE Behar zemindars and landholders have also drawn up a petition to the House of Commons regarding the new Bengal Rent Bill, which is the most powerful and carefully argued document yet prepared on the subject. It seems, however, a pity that discussions on this Bill should deal so largely with the history of land tenures in the past century, of which little is known, and nothing can be proved. The two main points about which zemindars in Bengal are concerned are that the new Bill will deprive them of all rights of property in their land, and also that it will fix their rents at one-fifth of the gross produce. The first change is certainly one of the strangest outcomes of the Radicalism of the present day. Should a man invest his savings in stocks, shares, houses, or ships, he may sell them, destroy them, lease them, or treat them in any other way he pleases; but let him sink his money in land, and his fate is sealed. Any pauper or vagrant may then come in the night time, and erect a shed or umbrella over the land, and as long as he pays a certain proportion of rent, he can never more be turned away. And if he chooses to remain twelve years, the entire ownership of the land will have passed into his hands, without the smallest consideration having been given for it, and he will be able to sell his right of occupancy to whomsoever he pleases, without consulting his so-called landlord. To the ordinary mind, this seems spoliation of the most deliberate kind. If this one principle were withdrawn, the Bill might probably be otherwise modified and passed with comparative ease; but if it is insisted on, the zemindars will rather part with their land to Government for a cash payment than hand it over to objectionable and troublesome tenants for no payment at all.

OBITUARY.—The Admiralty have received intelligence of the death of Mr. William Hounson, who, after serving many years as an Admiralty draftsman, went out to Bombay about six months ago as acting constructor. THE INDIA OFFICE.—During the Louis Mallet's period of administration at the India Office he introduced several important changes with a view to the more efficient and economical working of the several departments of that branch of the public service. This has only now been rendered practicable by the retirement of the Registrar, Mr. F. Thompson, after a service of nearly fifty years. The new department of Record and Registry has been placed in charge of Mr. F. C. Danvers, who was for some time assistant secretary in the Public Works Department, but who was selected on the retirement of Mr. C. R. Markham, C.B., to succeed that gentleman as assistant revenue secretary. It is also arranged that Mr. A. N. Wollaston, at present of the Political Department, and a well-known Oriental scholar whose "Persian English Dictionary," brought out by Messrs. Allen and Co. last year, supplied a long-felt want, will take over the post in the Revenue Department which Mr. Danvers now vacates.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1883.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION INVOLVED IN THE ILBERT BILL.

Now that the local opinions, to which Lord Ripon last year appealed when it was said that an "overwhelming consensus" favoured the Ilbert Bill, have been published in India—and some of them have also been published in England by the Times (Mr. Gladstone's promise to Mr. Stanhope that they should be immediately published here in full has been deliberately broken)—the controversy on the Ilbert Bill has distinctly entered a new phase. Lord Ripon's arbitrary and despotic character, backed up, as it unhappily appears to be, by all the force of a powerful and reckless Ministry at home, is now at last brought face to face with the victims of his tyranny. In vain has every argument of the supporters of the Bill been demolished a thousand times over: Sic volo, sic jubeo, stet pro ratione voluntas, is the conclusion of the whole matter. In vain have all classes of Anglo-Indians appealed to the better feelings of Lord Ripon. The loyal assumption of the Services and the leading non-officials that no English Viceroy would impose on his fellow-countrymen a burden which they declare is too grievous to be borne—the honest and respectful expostulations of the working classes—even the pitiful, unanimous cry for mercy of all the Englishwomen of India—all have been insufficient to move the stubborn and vindictive cruelty that is characteristic of offended vanity in a weak nature. All such appeals Lord Ripon spurns—much as James II. spurned the entreaties of the miserable Monmouth, and fancied he could spurn the English nation.

The Times, not an unkindly critic, considers that the resolutions recently passed by the Englishmen of Calcutta are marked by "regrettable violence," as indicating an intention to resist the law. We should entirely agree with the Times if we believed them to indicate anything of the kind. Apart from the obvious folly of such a thing, resistance to the law cannot be justified, even by the angry and surprised despair naturally felt by Englishmen, who find themselves crushed by despotic power, such as that which their ancestors fought and conquered. But what the Calcutta resolutions mean is, clearly, a determination, not to resist, but to test, the law. It may be said, "But surely, if the Viceroy's Legislative Council—to which the power of making laws for India has been delegated by the Crown and Parliament of England—passes the Bill into law at the Viceroy's order, there can be no further question as to the validity of that law." That, however, is just the constitutional point at issue, which the Defence Association proposes to test rigorously; and though at first sight it might seem that Lord Ripon's despotic power (when exercised through the respectable sham of a Legislative Council) admits of no question, we think a little consideration will show that there is, at any rate, a good deal to be said on the other side.

In the first place, it is quite clear that the proposed law is an infraction of the provision of Magna Charta, that secures to every Englishman for ever the right of being tried criminally per legale judicium parum suorum vel per legem terræ. We are aware that it has been contended by some eager partisans that this provision is not infringed; on the ground (1) that Indian subjects of Her Majesty are the "peers" of English subjects, or (2) that "the law of the land" may mean "the law of India." But we imagine no one with even a rudimentary knowledge of constitutional law has set up this contention on either of the absurd grounds just mentioned. Indian subjects of Her Majesty are certainly, we are glad to say, the "peers" of English subjects, in every ordinary sense of the term; and it is not therefore in the smallest degree derogatory to them to say that they clearly are not "peers" in the strictly legal and technical sense in which the word is used in our textbooks of constitutional law. Habeas Corpus itself does not apply to Indians. A conclusive instance has just been afforded by the striking "anomaly," that a most accomplished Bengali gentleman of the highest character and respectability—a gentleman whom we hope one day to see a member of the Covenanted Civil Service—has this year passed first in the competition for Woolwich, and yet may not hold a commission in the Royal Artillery. And with regard to the second ground of objection, all that need be said is, that it is founded on a vulgar error in respect of the meaning of the words per legem terræ. Every one knows, or ought to know, that here the lex terræ is, not the law of the land generally, but "that so ancient Common Law of England," which Sir Dudley Digges called "the undoubted birthright of free subjects," and of which, in regard to its antiquity, the poet's words were quoted by that great authority in Darnel's case—Ingrediturque solo caput inter nubila condit.

Now, it will not be denied that the English Legislature—King, Lords, and Commons—has power to repeal even Magna Charta. But can the English Legislature constitutionally delegate its power in this respect to a Viceroy, or even to a "Viceroy in Council?" The Legislature, by solemn enactment for each occasion, has suspended Habeas Corpus in Ireland; but would it be constitutional for the Legislature to delegate this power to the Viceroy of Ireland, so that he might suspend Habeas Corpus at his own sweet will? The highest constitutional authorities have held that no amount of delegation, real or pretended, could confer such power on the King in England; why, then, should it on the Viceroy in Ireland, or in India? For we need not point out that, the Legislative Council being admittedly a sham, the power confided to "the Viceroy in Council" is really given to the Viceroy himself. And if the Viceroy of Ireland is compelled by the constitution to submit each particular demand for the suspension of Habeas Corpus to the formal decision of the Imperial Legislature, is there any constitutional reason why the liberties and franchises of Englishmen in India should be more at the mercy of the Indian Viceroy? Would the delegation of the powers of the Imperial Legislature to the Viceroy in Council be sufficient to enable the Indian Legislature constitutionally to introduce slavery into India, without special reference to Parliament?

It is clear that there are, and must be, limits beyond which the delegated powers of the Imperial Legislature cannot constitutionally be ever used by the Viceroy and his mock-Legislature without renewed reference to the source of those powers. For instance, an English member of the Covenanted Civil Service goes to India possessing certain statutory rights—and of these rights he cannot be deprived by the Indian Legislature. May it not be urged, by parity of reasoning, that an English freeman who goes to India carries with him his rights under the common law of England, of which he cannot be disseised except by Act of Parliament?

Such, we imagine, are broadly the grounds on which the Defence Association of India considers itself justified in doubting the power of the Indian Legislature to pass a Bill of the nature of Mr. Ilbert's, in defiance of the virtually unanimous objection of those whom it affects. The doubts of the Association, whether well-founded or not, are of course capable of being resolved, one way or the other, in a perfectly legal and constitutional manner, by vigorously fighting one or two test cases through all the Courts. Since these doubts are certainly very widely entertained by Englishmen in India—and, amongst others, by many constitutional lawyers of high repute—we are of opinion that the Defence Association is entirely justified in asking for support in such a contest; indeed, it would be neglecting a most obvious duty if it declined the contest.

We have spoken of the Indian Legislature as a "sham" one. Of course, we mean simply that the Viceroy's Legislative Council is a body of nominees, with an official majority supposed to vote according to order. If the Council were really an independent body, there can be no doubt, after the publication of the local reports, as to what its decision on the Ilbert Bill would be. There are those who hope that the present opportunity will be seized by the Council as a fitting one for the vindication of its nominal independence; for it can hardly be doubted that the Government of India would not be disposed to resent too keenly a rebellion that would relieve it of a great difficulty. It is, however, notorious that the composition of the Council just now is not such as to warrant much hope of anything that might even smack of independence. So that, in every way, it appears to be incumbent on the Indian Defence Association to prepare for the worst.

THE HYDERABAD AND CHANDA RAILWAY AND ITS ORIGINATOR.

We are glad to be able to announce that the protracted and delicate negotiations connected with the inception of this magnificent railway extension, which is to open up some of the richest provinces of India, and to bring the vast territories of the Nizam's State into immediate contact with the markets and the civilisation of the outer world, have at length been brought to a successful issue. They have been personally conducted in this country at intervals for nearly two years past, through varying fortunes and amid great difficulties by the originator of the scheme—who is also the Secretary to the Nizam's Government in the Railway and Police Departments—the Sirdar Diler Jung Bahadur, C.I.E. To the tact and perseverance of this able young statesman is almost entirely due the credit of an achievement which promises to confer the greatest and most lasting benefits alike on the Hyderabad State and on the Empire at large.

In 1881 the large scheme of railway extension for Hyderabad, which is at length to be carried out—and which will not only open out the resources of the Nizam's dominions, but also bring the whole south of India into direct railway communication with Calcutta and the centre and north, and give the Hyderabad State a port at Masulipatam—was devised by the Sirdar Diler Jung, and elaborated by him in all its details. In November of that year Sir Salar Jung, the Regent at Hyderabad, wrote that "the two* schemes were originated, and the entire project carried out to its present stage by Syed Abdul Hak, whose endeavours in this matter I cannot but heartily recognise." The delay that has occurred in the successful prosecution of the scheme is largely due to the death of Sir Salar Jung. But all's well that ends well; and we think that the Nizam's Government and the Empire at large, as well as the persevering negotiator himself, are to be congratulated on the success that has at last been achieved in floating a scheme fraught with great immediate and still greater prospective advantages to the Hyderabad State.

The Nizam's Government has hitherto been financially burdened by a perpetual guarantee on the capital of the existing State Railway, at a high rate of interest. By the successful financing of the Sirdar—aided of course by a more or less favourable condition of the money market—the State will now get its railway system completed, and united with the general system of the Indian Empire, whilst the perpetual guarantee is extinguished altogether after a short term of years, and in the meantime the limited and temporary guarantee is to be at a lower rate per cent. When Sirdar Diler Jung arrived in England last June, the time was most unfavourable for the successful floating of a scheme of such magnitude. A great French financial disaster, the failure of the North Western Bengal Railway Company, recently brought out, and other reasons, had made capitalists cautious and unwilling to engage in speculation of any kind; and Sirdar Diler Jung had, therefore, to contend against difficulties of no ordinary nature. Before him lay the task of meeting the cleverest financiers, City men skilled in the solution of financial problems, and, without conceding a jot or title more than the terms considered necessary at a far more favourable period, inducing them to take part in the undertaking. In this task of unprecedented difficulty, the Sirdar has now entirely succeeded. We learn that the Syndicate that has been formed consists of houses of the highest financial standing; the National Provincial Bank of England having undertaken the floating of the scheme, and houses of unquestionable status, like the Ottoman Bank and others, having joined the syndicate.

It is worthy of note that an unmistakeable proof of the enlightenment and progress made by the Hyderabad State is to be found in the fact, that it is the first Native State that has sought the English market for the purpose of raising the capital required for large productive works; and we look forward hopefully to the time when this liberal spirit will pervade other States, and help forward the march of civilisation.

It has seldom, if ever, been our lot to examine a scheme fraught with such advantages to both capitalists and State as the Hyderabad-Chanda Railway. On the one hand, interest at 5 per cent. is guaranteed for twenty years on the share capital raised; a large deposit being made by the State with the Bank of England to meet this charge, or rather to supplement the earnings of the railway, should the latter at any time be found insufficient; while, on the other hand, a railway is constructed with its attendant advantages, a fertile tract of country is opened up, the mineral resources of the country are developed, and the present line is disposed of at a considerable premium. The working-out of the details of such a scheme is a marvel of financing; but too much can hardly be said in praise of the perseverance, untiring energy, and exquisitely delicate handling which has surmounted all obstacles, and carried through such a difficult project to a successful termination.

We find from the Bombay Gazette that the late lamented Sir Salar Jung, who expressed his unqualified approval of the scheme, was not unmindful of the laudable efforts put forth. One of his last official acts, just before his death, was to record his warm appreciation of the services of the Sirdar Diler Jung to the Nizam's Government in this matter, and his conviction of the great importance of the scheme to the interests of the Hyderabad State. Sir Salar, whose minute was quoted in the Deccan Times of May 31, and also in the Bombay Gazette, concluded by expressing "the complete satisfaction with which I regard the zeal, loyalty, and trustworthiness displayed by him in the carrying out of these important negotiations." "Although I had," wrote Sir Salar Jung, "no mean opinion of his ability when I deputed him on this business, the manner in which he conducted it is far beyond my expectations." The Council of Regency, in passing their final orders, added that they considered his "faithful and valuable service deserving of special recognition and reward."

This latest success of the Sirdar Diler Jung is another triumph added to a career that had already been a distinguished one, worthy of the ancient and noble family to which he belongs. It will not be out of place to refer here briefly to the antecedents and family connections of the remarkable stranger who is now amongst us as the accredited agent of H.H. the Nizam's Government. The Sirdar is a son of the Nawab of Karnala, of Nasik, in the Bombay Presidency—a Muhammadan noble whose immediate ancestor (as was noticed by Sir Richard Temple when he recommended the Sirdar for employment in the Berar Commission) was the Sayyid Kudbudeen Sajade Nisheen, Minister of the Emperor Aurangzeeb, and the grandson of a Prime Minister of the King of Bijapur. He was sent by the Emperor Aurangzeeb to Mecca, with credentials which entitled him to all the honour which would have been bestowed on Aurangzeeb himself. Besides the grants from the Mogul Emperor he was appointed by the Sultan of Turkey to be the chief of his affairs at Mecca and Medina, and received a grant of territory valued at about £60,000. He received the title of Nawab and the killadarship of the killa, or fort, of Karnala. He assisted the East India Company in their contest with the Sidi of Jinjira. Sayyid Abdul Hak Karnalkar is the third son of the present Nawab of Karnala. He was born on January 20, 1850; and having received a good Oriental education at Nasik (we learn that he is thoroughly conversant with seven Oriental languages), ultimately became one of the most eminent of the pupils of Dr. Wilson's English College at Bombay. He owed his introduction to the official career which he has so much adorned, to the discernment of Lord Mayo—who, like Lord Lytton, always manifested, in the most practical manner, his belief in the many advantages to be obtained from placing in responsible positions the capable and clever scions of noble Indian families. At Lord Mayo's special wish, Major (now Colonel Sir Owen) Burne gave the Sirdar a strong recommendation for employment in the Berar Commission; and it must be a matter of considerable gratification to Sir Owen Burne to find his early opinion so entirely borne out by the subsequent career of his nominee. The wishes of the Viceroy were shared also by Sir Richard Temple, Sir Barrow Ellis, and Mr. Saunders, then Resident at Hyderabad; and in 1870 Sayyid Abdul Hak was appointed an Extra Assistant Commissioner in Berar. After a successful and highly-approved service in the lower grades, he was recommended for promotion to the coveted rank of Assistant Commissioner, in the following terms:—

"The Resident begs to recommend the appointment of Mr. Abdul Hak, Extra Assistant Commissioner, fifth class. Mr. Abdul Hak is the son of a well-known and highly-respected Mahomedan nobleman, the Nawab Syed Jah Mahomed Khan of Karnala. He was appointed to the grade of Extra Assistant Commissioner in December, 1871, before the appointments of attachés to the Resident were sanctioned, but his nomination to the former grade was regarded as a probationary one, and it was from the first intended that he should eventually, if duly qualified, be promoted to the higher grade of the commission."

Before he received this well-merited promotion Sayyid Abdul Hak had qualified himself for it by passing all the prescribed examinations in Criminal, Civil and Revenue law. He had held offices in the Revenue, Judicial, Police, and Financial Departments, and acquitted himself so well as to win the confidence and esteem of his superior officers. Successive Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners had marked him for his integrity and honesty of purpose, and Mr. Saunders, Sir Richard Meade, Mr. Jones, and Sir Stuart Bayley, British Residents at the Court of H.H. the Nizam, all entertained a high opinion of his abilities. The last-named officer, who is now a member of the Viceregal Council, writes of him, "He enjoyed to a very high degree the confidence of Sir R. Meade, a confidence which I believe to have been thoroughly justified, and you will gather from this correspondence that he is equally in the confidence of Sir Salar Jung."

The Sirdar had not been long in the higher grade of the Berar Commission as an Assistant Commissioner, when he was selected by Sir Salar Jung for a Judgeship of the High Court of Hyderabad—an appointment which was warmly approved by the Hon. Mr. Gibbs, of the Supreme Council, who wrote on that occasion, "I think you are justified in accepting H.E. the Nawab's offer of a seat in his High Court." But early in 1879 circumstances occurred which transferred the Sirdar to the more active executive career for which his ability and energy peculiarly fitted him. The audacity of the famous leader of dākāits, Wassoodeo Balwant Phadke, and his intrigues with the Rohillas and Arabs of the Hyderabad State, necessitated the adoption of special measures of repression by the Government of Bombay and that of the Nizam. Armed bodies had been unsuccessfully sent out in pursuit of the notorious incendiary, and the Poona Horse had been told off to the duty of tracking him; but he evaded all attempts at capture, and was for months the terror of the Poona District. The scenes of his exploits being frequently on the boundary between the Nizam's territory and the Bombay Presidency, the Sirdar was selected by Sir Salar Jung to direct the operations on behalf of the Nizam's Government. The remarkable success of those operations is a matter of history; and the Bombay Government, in communicating to the Government of the Nizam the satisfaction felt by the British authorities, brought to special notice the "personal courage and praiseworthy presence of mind and determination" of the Hyderabad Commissioner, who had (with Major Daniell, of the Poona Police) not only unravelled the whole conspiracy, but also, at considerable risk to life, personally seized the ringleaders—Wassoodeo himself and his most trusted confederate having been tracked on foot from village to village and seized by Major Daniell and the Sirdar at dead of night in an old temple at Dev Nadigiri, near Ghannoor.

The importance of this arrest will be evident when we point out that the rebel leader had just completed arrangements for the enlistment of 5,000 Rohillas in the Hyderabad territory. Immediately after the arrest of Wassoodeo, the Sirdar proceeded alone to a village, where he learnt that the Jemadar of these Arabs was to be found. With a handful of men, he arrested the chief in his stronghold, and also some village officials who were implicated, notwithstanding that there were some 500 Rohillas in the neighbourhood. The pluck exhibited on this occasion cowed the truculence of the Afghans; no rescue was attempted, and all danger of a rising was at an end. For these exploits the Sirdar received from Her Most Gracious Majesty the decoration of the Indian Empire; and he subsequently received from H.H. the Nizam the title of Sirdar Diler Jung by which he is now known.

We learn from the Bombay Gazette of June 12, that, before the final success of the Sirdar's financial negotiations in connection with the railway extension had been assured, the late Secretary of State for India, Lord Hartington, in a letter to the Government of India graciously expressed his belief:—

"That the Sirdar has conducted the protracted and difficult negotiations with great care and ability. . . . The Sirdar's services will no doubt meet with due recognition on the part of the Nizam's Government."

In this opinion we are confident that all those who are interested in the progress that is being made in the development of the material resources of India, and in the advancement of its civilisation, will entirely concur.
